Bowers and Merena has received more awards from the Numismatic Literary Guild, the Professional Numismatists Guild, and the American Numismatic Association for its catalogues and other publications than have all of our auction competitors combined. Included have been Catalogue of the Year Award, Book of the Year Award, and other important recognitions.

PERSONAL AWARDS: Q. David Bowers, Chairman of Bowers and Merena, has received the top honors given by the American Numismatic Association including the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award (the very highest honor), the Hall of Fame recognition, and more. He has also received the highest honor given by the Professional Numismatists Guild, the Founders Award. Further, he has been president of both the American Numismatic Association and Professional Numismatists Guild. Many other members of the Bowers and Merena staff have been recognized for their accomplishments and abilities including the recognition of new die varieties, publication of articles and books, numismatic research, and other accomplishments. The officers of no other firm have been recognized to this extent.

While many firms try to be like Bowers and Merena (and we wish them well), what we say here is not a matter of opinion, but is proven fact. When you deal with Bowers and Merena, you deal with a firm with an unequaled record of success. Let our success be your success when it comes to auctioning your coins. For the present your coins belong to you alone, but one day it will be time to pass them on to others who will value them just as much. Once sold, a collection becomes just a fond memory—that is, unless you have it preserved by PHOTO PROOF. Only PHOTO PROOF captures the very essence of your coins. Each piece is photographed through our state-of-the-art digital imaging process, which brings out all of the colors and characteristics that make your coins unique. Both sides are shown in vivid photos that are up to six times actual size! These beautiful images are then mated with text prepared by experts in United States coinage, revealing the fascinating stories behind each particular coin type. The finishing touch is a thorough analysis of your coin, detailing its qualities of strike, luster, toning and rarity. As Director of Research, it is my privilege to personally prepare this segment of PHOTO PROOF.

Director of Research

On the cover of every PHOTO PROOF is space to include a personalization of your choosing. If you elect to include your own name, you will become a permanent link in that specimen's pedigree. A dedication to one's family is another popular choice. This feature is entirely optional, but it's included at no additional cost. Duplicate copies of your PHOTO PROOF library may be ordered at a very reasonable price, and you can even alter the personalization.

PHOTO PROOF accepts all United States coins certified by NGC, PCGS or ANACS. Coins may be submitted to PHOTO PROOF through any NGC authorized dealer. For more information, call 1-800-PROOF67.

Whether you're planning to sell your collection in the near future, retain it for years to come, or pass it on to your family, you will want to preserve your achievement with PHOTO PROOF because your coins are special.

Members' Messages Are Being Heard

I ASKED FOR input from the membership, and it already has started pouring in. I promise that all your comments are being read and seriously considered. Suggestions that require action or further investigation are being passed along to the entire ANA Board of Governors for its attention.

In a hobby organization the size of the ANA, it is difficult, nay impossible, to satisfy the wishes of all members. We are just too diverse in our interests and attitudes. What is important is that we set realistic goals for the good of all members and stick by them.

When the recently elected Board of Governors met in September, the first thing Board members did was agree on a set of values. They pledged to 1) "provide exceptional service to the numismatic community by actively promoting knowledge and education"; 2) "create a dynamic strategy based on member needs and follow through expeditiously"; 3) "effectively develop, maintain and manage our resources"; 4) "work together to achieve team goals while respecting individual viewpoints"; 5) "be known as a dynamic leadership team committed to responsive, unsurpassed service"; and 6) "establish innovative, challenging and meaningful goals that embrace the future while respecting tradition."

The ANA's prime mission is well known. Our federal charter states it clearly. We are an educational organization dedicated to fostering interest in numismatics. How we go about doing this is where opinions differ. Those who have strong inclinations often fail to see there may be many ways to accomplish the same goal.

I have observed two basic types of ANA members.

FROM YOUR PRESIDENT
.....
BY KENNETH BRESSETT

One sees the Association as a mentor that guides, instructs and protects them in their collecting activities. The question usually posed upon joining is "What can the ANA do for me?"

That query is not unreasonable, but sometimes it puts the old-timers at a loss for an answer, because they overlook the reality that assistance is necessary to get started in the hobby today. I fear we don't spend enough time making numismatics "user friendly" for beginners. The question of what the ANA can do for neophytes needs our attention, but just providing additional services is not the solution to building a stronger organization.

The second type of member keeps the hobby alive and growing. This member does not question what the organization can do for them, but rather uses the ANA as a vehicle to do things for others and the hobby. They are the ones who help beginners, donate their time and resources to the Association for the good of others, write articles, and pass on their knowledge and experience.

It takes both kinds of members to form an affinity. Neither is more important than the other, and over time one tends to "morph" into the other. If the two types only realized how close they are, there might be less agitation from both sides as to what the ANA should be doing for its members.

How do you view yourself? Do you ask, "What can I get out of the ANA?" or "How can I give something back to the hobby?" If you don't fit in either category, it may be time to reevaluate your commitment. Perhaps you need to take on the role of tutor, explore a new area of numismatics, or get involved in running your club.

I have invited each of you to contact me with your suggestions. I now further challenge you to take an active part in implementing those suggestions. Don't simply sit on the sidelines coaching or criticizing those who are working for change. Be a part of the team that makes the changes. Be a part of the effort to spread the word about the world's oldest and most enjoyable hobby. I can promise you that helping others participate is well worth the effort.

Kenneth Bressett (LM 369), ANA president, never just "sat on the sidelines" of numismatics. In 1950 he organized the first coin club in his home state of New Hampshire. He became an active participant in club activities throughout the New England area, serving as president of three clubs. Later he became involved with local clubs in several other states, and now holds memberships in numerous regional and specialty groups.

Early Spring Convention Site: AZ vs. CA

"... the ANA should be given credit for packing its bags and coming to Tucson ..."

—Elliott Goldman, Dealer
Tucson, AZ

"... California ... has one of the most positive coin-collecting climates ..."

—Fred Weinberg, Dealer
Encino, CA

AT A TIME when people are trying to find fault with anything and everything, the ANA should be given credit for packing its bags and coming to Tucson for the 1996 Early Spring Convention, slated for March 14-16.

The reasons for the move are very compelling. First, a good precedent has been set for ANA shows in Tucson, beginning with the Early Spring Convention held here in 1983. Even before the ANA announced the move from Santa Clara, California, to Tucson, all the dealers with whom I have spoken were looking forward to coming back here. The proof of this can be found in the increased sale of bourse tables by the ANA Convention Department immediately following announcement of the change of venue.

Second, Tucson has more days of sun than any city in the country, and a quality of life second to none. More non-stop flights are coming into Tucson than ever before. Colorado's professional baseball team, the Rockies, trains in Tucson each spring. The opera, ballet, theater company and symphony are located within a two-minute walk of the Tucson Convention Center, and nice restaurants are just a stone's throw away. The Saguaro National Monument, Desert Museum, Colossal Cavern and Tombstone all are short drives from downtown Tucson; the Mt. Lemmon ski area is only 30 miles away; and it is 60 miles to the Mexican border.

Finally, California has become an impossible place to do business. Even before the California tax problem reared its ugly head, Tony Tumonis, an ANA regional coordinator and now general chairman of the 1996 Early Spring Convention, lobbied for a show in Tucson. He is a tremendously hard worker and will labor with the very active Tucson Coin Club to do everything he can to ensure a smooth-running, enjoyable convention.

All in all, when one considers the benefits our city has to offer, it is a slam dunk that the American Numismatic Association made the right decision in bringing the 1996 Early Spring Convention to Tucson. •

IS YOUR STATE pro-business? If so, it should reap the benefits of pro-business policies that enable coin dealers to conduct business out of their home state without worrying about creating a nexus (a business connection) in another state.

In September the American Numismatic Association rightfully canceled its Early Spring Convention in Santa Clara, California, scheduled for March 1996. Apparently what many would consider a strong anti-business position by the California State Board of Equalization would have obligated dealers attending "several" coin shows in this state to collect and pay not only the California use tax on all interstate sales made by out-of-state dealers to any purchasers in California, but also an additional $800 California corporation filing fee.

Since the ANA's Anniversary Convention in Anaheim in August, there have been reports that the State of California is requesting audits of some out-of-state coin dealers' financial records, including all sales from their home offices. Many California coin dealers are surprised at this situation, because a few years ago they were able to turn the $1,000 or more "sales tax exemption" into a permanent law.

Professional numismatists in California believe our state has one of the most positive coin-collecting climates, with impressive attendance at coin shows, good overall mail-order sales, and high public interest in coin collecting, illustrated by the fact that California has the largest ANA membership of any state.

For my personal convenience, I wish the American Numismatic Association would have many of its future Early Spring and Anniversary Conventions in California. However, Tucson is not that far away by plane; the weather there should be wonderful; and it certainly will draw many coin dealers and collectors from the western United States. Until this taxing situation changes, our neighboring states of Arizona and Nevada will benefit from the State of California's current anti-business mentality. •

Advertisers Can Boost Business, Better ANA Membership

One of the most memorable highlights in my long, numismatic career was receiving the ANA's Top Recruiter Award for 1981 and 1982, along with Robert Hughes. This award, as its title suggests, is presented to the coin dealer who proposes or sponsors the most new ANA members during a given year.

The real story, however, is not our receiving the honor, but how it came about. At the time, I was employed as retail operations manager by Amwest Numismatics; Hughes was chief operations officer. During most of 1981, our firm placed full-page ads in each week's issue of Coin World, and at a firm planning session, it was decided to use the bottom half of the last two columns on the page to include a copy of the ANA membership application, with Hughes' and my signatures as proposers. Most important was a recommendation to join the Association. In a number of our ads, the recommendation included our offer to pay the first $5 of the $15 membership dues. We made arrangements with the ANA to accept the $10 the applicants sent in, and we were billed for the other $5. I don't know how much it cost the firm, but it certainly was worth it from Amwest's point of view.

Do you coin dealers out there have any idea of the purchasing power of 497 brand-new ANA members who are eager to get going in their new hobby? Do you know what it means to have your firm on top of their lists of dealers (particularly since they obviously would favor you because of your sponsorship, and, possibly, your partial payment of their membership fees)? Can you think of any easier way to build a loyal, active following?

In a recent issue of Coin World, there were 42 full-page ads. Numismatic News carries practically the same percentage. I suggest these advertisers use the necessary space for an ANA application (with the principal's name as sponsor) on at least one, full-page advertisement in every issue. If you wish to include an incentive to join using this particular application, so much the better. The results would not only be a tremendous boost to the hobby, but also could have far-reaching effects on your customer relations and your cash flow. Come on—get with it!

Collector Suggests Fix for Mint's Commemorative Coin Program

An article in the September 11, 1995, issue of Coin World stated that the ANA might consider boycotting the United States Mint's commemorative coin program. Considering the Mint chart that appeared in the August 8, 1995, issue of Numismatic News (the "profit and loss" statement from the "manufacture and sale of U.S. commemorative coins"), the ANA should work to get this program discontinued to save the government and coin collectors money.

According to the chart, collectors have paid $1,510,300,000 into this program. The government made $118,600,000, less the loss to the Mint of $1,400,000, for a net of $117,200,000. Had the government just sold the gold and silver at market price, its profit would have been

Toning Still a Touchy Topic

In response to Weimar White's letter regarding toning ("Kimmel Article Warrants Response," September 1995, p. 1071), I have to say, "Borrrriiiiing." I would estimate that 90 percent of all coin collectors know toning is a form of tarnish or corrosion. However, those two, ugly words in no way describe some of the beautiful pieces in my collection.

I find "blazing white" coins tedious. They look new, and I prefer an antique object to look like one. Toned coins offer an endless variety of color and eye appeal. A beautifully toned piece has a truly distinctive, antique quality.

Obviously, this issue boils down to taste. I have a bunch of untuned coins, and I'd trade them in a minute for toned examples of equal grade. So Mr. White, those of us with a taste for color don't care about technical discourses on "corrosion." You are right about toned coins not being equal to "pristine ones." They're better.

Brian ("Mike") Drager, ANA 155482

In researching the subject of coin toning, I have found flowing among the nuggets of fact a stream of dispute between two of the topic's principal authors, Messrs. Weimar White and Andrew Kimmel. In his recent letter, White attacked Kimmel's article (July 1995, "The Beauty of Naturally Toned Coins," p. 833). Both authors, who also have published their points elsewhere, are asking readers to decide whether toning amounts to nothing more than unrecoverable surface damage (White), or is a valuable aspect of eye appeal to those attracted by it (Kimmel).

I believe one can accommodate both sides of the issue, and that there is more important work to be done in the area of toning than to pursue this controversy in print in the absence of new information.

Kimmel surely would agree that he is indeed a dealer in toned coins and promotes them in order to sell them, but White's letter implies there is something devious in this because Kimmel "touts toned or corroded coins as equal to pristine ones." To properly evaluate this statement, it is important to focus on the terms "toned" and "corroded," and what is meant by "pristine."

Chemist White is technically correct in defining the oxidation of any metal surface as corrosion, but I believe the negative connotation is inappropriate when applied to toning in general. Naturally colored coins can be pretty or ugly, but only certain of the latter might deserve being called "corroded." Perhaps White should include all silver coins in the corroded category, because every one acquires a deactivating and invisible micro-layer of silver oxide immediately upon exposure of its freshly minted, silver surface to the atmosphere. Of course, only silver-sulfide compounds give rise to the much thicker layers and measurable loss of silver that result in the colors of toning.

Rather than dismissing White, it might be useful for Kimmel to grant him credit for his very enlightening studies that quantify the process of surface sulfiding (see the March 1990 [p. 398] and June 1993 [p. 792] issues of The Numismatist). This body of work reveals the actual amounts of silver converted from the metallic to the ionic form during the toning process. This is important information. It helps the curious understand how and when we see the colors that develop in toning and can guide those who wish to study artificial toning or consider the consequences of dipping coins.

The second, more important point of confusion to many interested in the toning controversy is what is meant by an "original" coin. White accuses Kimmel of equating toned with pristine coins. In fact, Kimmel does not use the term "pristine" in his article. He uses the term "original" to mean not dipped, cleaned or tampered with. To White, it means the condition of a coin as freshly struck. Fair enough. For Kimmel, it is up to the buyer to decide whether the loss of that pristine condition in favor of a nicely colored, but still original, toned coin should enhance, reduce or have no effect on a coin's value. That seems equally reasonable. It seems a simple matter of definition, not a real point of argument.

With many aspects of toning yet to be resolved, I call for those active in this fascinating area to apply their time in a search for new knowledge, rather than in attempts to discredit one another.

Robert S. Neale, ANA 158540

After reading Weimar White's letter in the September issue, I decided it was time I put in my two cents worth. I've spent the last year or so reading at least two dozen articles (equally divided between "pro" and "con") about toning. Let's simply say it like it is: some people like attractive toning and some desire only brilliant-white coins. How often have we seen a dealer advertise one of the following: "1800 Draped Bust Dollar, AU-50, brilliant white with just a faint hint of wear" or "1842 Seated Liberty Dollar, NGC-64, brilliant white"? How can any coin that is almost 200 years old, especially one that has spent a short time in circulation, be "brilliant white"? If a collector of modern U.S. commemorative dollars were to carefully store his or her coins using current technological methods and knowledge, perhaps in the year 2152 that collection might still be "brilliant white."

As a longtime collector of Morgan dollars, I've removed toning from approximately 10 percent of the coins I have owned. My "treated" coins have made it through the two major grading services without being rejected. However, there are several coins I wouldn't even allow near a coin-dip solution, including pieces with moderately heavy toning and a blotchy appearance. (This type of toning often hides small surface marks.) I would never dip a toned Lafayette commemorative dollar, which typically tones because of its original packaging. Another coin I would not attempt to dip is a toned Walking Liberty half dollar. Often one that looks uncirculated (and that might be encapsulated as such) shows evidence of light rub after a quick dip, especially if the luster is marginal to start with.

If we let the toned-coin advocates have their way, we would have to completely restructure the pricing system regarding coins minted during the 18th and 19th centuries. All silver coins that qualify as "brilliant white" would have to be re-graded. The toned coins in grades MS-60 and higher would increase in value by perhaps 100 percent, and the "white" coins formerly graded MS-60 and higher would drop tremendously in value. That is why this debate between the "whites" and the "toned" should be put to rest. Let it remain "to each his own."

Edward C. Olsson, ANA 130561

I think much of Weimar White's response to Andrew Kimmel's stand on toning is unfair. In his letter in the September issue of The Numismatist, White states that "Kimmel is a dealer who touts toned or corroded coins as being equal to pristine ones. As such, his agenda is to sell toned coins to his clients using the same hype we all have heard over the years." This is harsh and one-sided! It may well be that toned coins, technically, are corroded, as White argues, and while they are not as desirable as pristine pieces in some respects, in others they are even more so.

A pastel-toned, mint state silver dollar has a surface that works as a natural coating (or protective layer) that wards off attacks by other, far more dangerous gases. More often than not, the colors resulting from the action of sulfur compounds are quite appealing to many collectors. I understand that when a mint state silver coin is sufficiently exposed to hydrogen chloride gas, it takes on a very cloudy appearance, and its luster is destroyed. Dipping, as far as I know, will not restore any of the original luster.

During the 1960s, many mint state silver coins were stored in polyvinyl-chloride (PVC) holders, which caused irremediable damage. When such coins are attacked by sulfur compounds, however, it is no great tragedy. If one does not care for the resulting toning, one can remove it entirely with a light dipping. Yet, White states, "It makes absolutely no difference if colored coins are dipped, since the damage caused by sulfur already has occurred and can be assessed . . ."

I have an extensive coin collection, and two of the pieces clearly relate to the issue at hand. One (an 1879-S silver dollar) is a pristine, Gem coin with outstanding mint bloom. The other (an 1885 silver dollar graded MS-64) displays a pleasing mint luster on the obverse and an appealing series of bright colors on the reverse. The latter coin is neither superior nor inferior to the former; it is merely different. If it is corroded, so be it. It is an old coin, and I like it. Ultimately, I guess it is just such simple considerations that really matter to collectors.

I am writing (again) to say I had the greatest time at the ANA's 104th Anniversary Convention in Anaheim this past August. I wrote earlier this cousin of our pocket change, has proved to be capable of carrying values no less durable than coins. For a number of reasons, the people who already have built impressive collections of these miniature monuments continue to spread the word that art medals are indeed worthy of more serious consideration.

Medals ideally are tailored to serve as permanent records of our collective conscience. Besides their historical significance, medals are great artistic statements. At their best, they deliver uniquely packaged, highly inspirational personal experiences, expressed with exceptional virtuosity. Unlike any other medium found at the gallery, in the museum or on a living room wall, medals are fruits of the creative imagination that need to be held in the palm of your hand so they can touch your heart, open your inner eye and tell you a story you may never have heard before.

No matter how personal, art medals are created to be viewed (and appreciated) by many people. I find it extremely rewarding to discuss these works of art with professional numismatists and coin collectors, even if they don't immediately express recognition of the aesthetic merits of medallic sculpture. The more said and the more opinions expressed, the greater the chance that some day we will create a new trend and market for medallic art.

It gave me great pleasure to watch seasoned numismatists walking around the AMSA exhibit with expressions of happy surprise on their faces, and it feels like the American Numismatic Association Money Museum is indeed a friendly [though temporary] home for these new medals, where people, art and ideas come together in a free exchange of ideas and mutual enrichment.

As we prepare to enter the third millennium, let's hope for many more happy encounters between artists, numismatists and collectors. Let's make it a point to meet more often and discuss the future of medallic art. The show must go on!

UNITED STATES: Mint Introduces Deluxe Version of Popular Uncirculated Set

The United States Mint has created a companion product to its 10-coin uncirculated set. With a limited mintage of 50,000, the "deluxe uncirculated set" is specially packaged with cameo portraits and biographical sketches of the Presidents pictured on U.S. circulating coins.

"We've dressed up an enduring favorite for 1995," says Mint Director Philip N. Diehl. "Our regular uncirculated set is a staple for collectors and often the first item in their collections. The deluxe 'unc' set is attractive, inexpensive, collectable in its own right, and ideal for gifts that introduce young collectors to the hobby."

Like the familiar uncirculated set, the new collection comprises one example of each circulating denomination from both the Philadelphia and Denver Mints—the Lincoln cent, Jefferson nickel, Roosevelt dime, Washington quarter and Kennedy half dollar—along with "mintmark" pieces from both facilities. Each set is presented in a high-gloss, sleeve-and-insert blister pack, similar to the Mint's "Young Collectors" editions for commemoratives.

One of the offerings available from the 1995 U.S. Mint Gift Collection Catalogue, mailed to 2.2 million current and prospective customers in September, the set carries

AUSTRIA: Silver Commemorative Represents Life in the Alpine Foothills

On September 21, the Austrian Mint released the sixth coin in its silver commemorative coin series "Austria and Her People." The 500-schilling piece is dedicated to the rolling country of the Alpine foothills.

The obverse shows a collage representing a typical landscape. In the foreground is a farmhouse beside an avenue of fruit trees, reminiscent of the local "Most," a light alcoholic beverage produced from fruit, particularly apples or pears. In the valley, between thickly wooded hills, rise the towers of the town of Waidhofen an der Ybbs. Perched high above at the left is the baroque pilgrimage church of the Holy Trinity on the Sonntagsberg. The peaks of the Alps form a distant backdrop. On the reverse, a lumberjack uses a traditional

SINGAPORE: Latent Image Highlights World War II Ingot

A commemorative ingot released by the Singapore Mint on the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II features a state-of-the-art "latent image." The feature is used on the obverse of the piece to express the changes experienced by the people of Singapore during the war.

UNITED STATES: Diehl Medal Joins Mint Director Series

On September 12, the United States Mint announced the availability of its Philip N. Diehl medal, the latest issue in a series produced since the 1870s to recognize the service of U.S. Mint directors. The obverse of the medal was designed and executed by John Mercanti, the reverse is by William Cousins; both are sculptor/engravers at the Mint.

The obverse bears a profile portrait of Diehl. The reverse features cameos of Alexander Hamilton, the first secretary of the treasury, and Thomas Jefferson, creator of the U.S. decimal coinage system. The inscription below reads FOUNDING FATHERS OF THE MINT/FIRST SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY/FIRST SECRETARY OF STATE. Above the cameos is a depiction of the original Philadelphia Mint, the first federal building. Inscribed around the upper border is 35TH DIRECTOR UNITED STATES MINT,

Actual Size: 76.2mm

Philip N. Diehl chose to pay tribute to the historical lineage of the Mint on his Mint Director's medal.

JUNE 24, 1994 (the date Diehl's appointment was confirmed by the Senate).

"I particularly wanted the medal to emphasize the founders of our nation's financial and monetary system and the historical lineage of the U.S. Mint," says Diehl. "It is a unique heritage of which we should be proud. I think that it had been largely forgotten, and I've wanted to reclaim it as a source of inspiration for our management and employees."

The Mint Director series, along with series of medals commemorating U.S. Presidents and Treasury secretaries, have long been popular with numismatists. Mint Director's medals are used for presentations during official Mint functions and as tokens of recognition for superior service by Mint employees.

The 76.2mm bronze medals also are available for purchase from the U.S. Mint for $20 (#324 on the Mint Medals List) at Mint Sales Centers located in the Philadelphia and Denver Mints, and in Union Station in Washington, D.C. ANA/PNG Video Wins National Award

The Parents' Choice Foundation recently named Money: History in Your Hands, an educational program about coin collecting produced for the ANA and the Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG), as the recipient of its 1995 video award. A nonprofit consumer organization, the Parents' Choice Foundation reviews a wide range of children's books, magazines, music and toys, as well as video, audio, television and computer programs. The ANA and PNG submitted the 30-minute video, narrated by award-winning actor James Earl Jones, for consideration immediately after its completion last summer.

Says ANA Education Director James Taylor, who served as project director for the video, "We are definitely pleased with the recognition and quite gratified that the video has gained this kind of national attention. Reviews by coin columnists have been equally positive, indicating not only the success of this video project, but also an apparent demand for this type of educational tool."

As of October, video sales exceeded 4,100 copies, with more than 1,500 purchased for specific distribution to public libraries and coin dealers' customers. Arlyn Sieber, spokesman for Krause Publications, which purchased 250 copies of the video, said the Wisconsin publishing firm is distributing the videos to the state's public libraries.

"For the sake of the hobby, Krause Publications wants to expose as many people as possible to the joys of numismatics," Sieber explains. "We think that if people go to their local libraries seeking information about numismatics, the video is a proper introduction."

Tom Sheehan of the Pacific Northwest Numismatic Association (PNNA) agrees, saying, "Our club purchased 100 copies of the video for distribution to libraries in our region, which includes Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Alaska."

Armand DeAngelis of U.S. Coin Exchange in Florida notes that his firm purchased 700 copies of the video to give to its customers. "We think the video provides a good

TUCSON Convention Update

If the Arizona locale surprises you, then you probably haven't heard about the ANA Board's recent decision to move the Early Spring Convention from Santa Clara, California, to Tucson (see the November 1995 issue, p. 1337). The dates of the 1996 show also have been changed to March 14-16.

Convention-goers will be pleased to know that most major airlines and all southwestern air carriers service Tucson. Those living in nearby California will find the driving distance from San Diego to Tucson is the same as that to Santa Clara. Convention General Chairman Tony Tumonis assures the early spring weather will be temperate and mild.

"Look, Ma, no pre-registration card!" Members searching the pages of The Numismatist for the customary Early Spring Convention pre-registration form won't find one. Says Convention Director Ruthann Brettell, "Since no special tours, banquets or souvenirs are planned for our show in Tucson, members really don't need to pre-register. Just pack your bags and come!"

A "Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG) Preview" will be offered just prior to dealer setup at the show. Scheduled for 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. on Wednesday, March 13, the Preview will adhere strictly to the PNG's invitation-only policy; however, all ANA-member dealers will be invited to attend. ANA dealer setup begins that afternoon at 1 o'clock. • portrait of numismatics and coin collecting," he says.

David Sundman, president of Littleton Coin Company in New Hampshire, which purchased 500 copies for a similar purpose, says, "It's a wonderful video. We just showed it to our 182 employees, and they all loved it. We plan to include it as part of new-employee training."

The ANA/PNG coin-collecting video, Money: History in Your Hands, is available for $21.95 postpaid from the ANA. Pittman to Receive "Numismatist of the Year" Honors in Orlando Designed to salute individual numismatic achievement, the ANA's "Numismatist of the Year" award will be presented to well-known collector John Jay Pittman during the Florida United Numismatists (FUN) show in Orlando, Florida, scheduled for January 4-7, 1996. Pittman, a life member and former ANA president, is one of the most honored members of the American Numismatic Association. He was instrumental in working with Congress for the passage of the Hobby Protection Act in 1973 and for the 1976 issuance of a circulating commemorative quarter in honor of our nation's bicentennial.

lowing his early retirement from Eastman Kodak in Rochester, New York, in 1971, Pittman has reached out to enrich the hobby with his background in chemical engineering and metallurgy, and wealth of historical and political knowledge. He served as a member of the U.S. Assay Commission in 1947; presided over the Canadian Numismatic Association as its president from 1969 to 1971; was honorary president of the Sociedad Numismatica de Mexico in 1971; authored numerous articles for The Numismatist; and has been a frequent and well-received speaker at ANA Numismatic Theatre presentations and other educational programs.

Pittman has been honored repeatedly by the Association. His numismatic service led to receipt of the ANA Medal of Merit in 1962; the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award for Distinguished Service in 1980; Honorary Life Membership in 1991; the Lifetime Achievement Award in 1994; and the Glenn Smedley Memorial Award in 1995. In 1992 he was inducted into the ANA's Numismatic Hall of Fame.

A fund-raising, "hobby enhancement" reception and dinner will held in John Jay Pittman's honor beginning at 7 p.m. on Friday, January 5, at Orlando's elegant Peabody Hotel. Tickets are priced at $250 per individual or $350 per couple, of which $160 and $180, respectively, is considered a charitable contribution to the nonprofit American Numismatic Association. Those who wish to attend the pre-dinner reception only may acquire tickets for $50 each ($35 of which is a charitable contribution). Donors who purchase tickets before December 20 will be listed in the official souvenir dinner program; those unable to attend, but who wish to honor Mr. Pittman, will be listed in the program for a $100 patron donation. Proceeds from the dinner will benefit the ANA Money Museum.

H. directly with 15 regional coordinators, who in turn communicate with the more than 200 district delegates assigned to assist 600-plus ANA-member clubs. Region 6, which Campbell served as a regional coordinator, now will be handled by Tony Tumonis of Tucson, Arizona.

ANA President Kenneth Bressett, who made the appointment, says, "The Association owes a big debt of gratitude to Ralph Langham for helping establish this truly representative program. It maintains open lines of communication and resources among the ANA Board of Governors, staff and clubs. I am certain Bob Campbell will do an excellent job as national coordinator."

ANA Curator Presents Ancient Coin Seminar to Anchorage Coin Club

The Anchorage (Alaska) Coin Club recently received an in-depth look at ancient coinage from expert Robert W. Hoge, curator of the ANA Money Museum. The three-day seminar, entitled "Coinage of the Ancient World," provided a basic understanding of Greek and Roman coins through slides, discussions, and hands-on examination of genuine and counterfeit specimens from the ANA Museum collection.

Hoge focused on identifying and interpreting coins, and offered perspectives on grading, collecting and conservation. He reviewed principal reference works associated with ancient coins and discussed research methods. "Although I have made similar presentations over the last 13 years, I tailor each one to the individual group," Hoge said. "In this instance, we examined many historical events and personalities, as well as ancient technology, metrology and ancient coin hoards. I think history came to life for each of the two dozen students at the seminar as they discovered a new facet of collecting in general and ancient coins in particular."

As part of the ANA's commitment to educational outreach, Hoge has made similar presentations at Bryn Mawr College, the Seattle Coin Club and the ANA's Annual Summer Conference, where he also has overseen individual study courses on various aspects of ancient coinage.

THE ADOPTIVE EMPERORS: COINAGE OF ROME'S ZENITH

The English historian Edward Gibbon termed the second century A.D. the "happiest age in history." Between 96 and 180 A.D., the Roman Empire was ruled by a series of capable emperors. After the assassination in A.D. 96 of Domitian, the last of the Flavian emperors, the Senate chose one of their own members, the elderly Nerva, to succeed to the throne. To secure the support of the army, the new emperor adopted the general Trajan as his son and heir in A.D. 97. This adoption set a precedent, for the next four emperors—Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus Plus, and Marcus Aurelius—would come to the throne as the adoptive son of their predecessor. Under these "adoptive emperors," the Roman Empire would reach the zenith of its power and prosperity.

In A.D. 98, Trajan became emperor upon the death of Nerva. Under Trajan, the Roman Empire underwent its last significant territorial expansion. After two campaigns (A.D. 101-102 and 105-106), Trajan annexed the Kingdom of the Dacians (modern Romania). In A.D. 105, the Kingdom of the Nabataeans was converted into the Roman province of Arabia Petraea. In A.D. 114, a dispute with Parthia led Trajan to annex Armenia and invade Mesopotamia. In A.D. 116, Mesopotamia was declared a Roman Province. However, rebellions in the East, including those of the Jews, forced Trajan to retreat. He died in A.D. 117 before he could resume campaigning in the East. Before his death, Trajan named his adopted son Hadrian as his heir.

The reign of Hadrian was one of consolidation. The new emperor gave up Trajan's eastern conquests—Armenia regained its former status as a Roman vassal state. Other frontiers were strengthened. In Britain, the wall he built to defend against the Scottish tribes is still to be seen. Hadrian spent most of his reign outside of Italy, touring the provinces to see first-hand what were each territory's needs. In A.D. 136, Hadrian adopted a certain L. Ceionius Commodus, who took the name Aelius Caesar, as his son and heir. However, the death of Aelius in A.D. 138 compelled Hadrian to designate a new heir, Antoninus. In turn, Hadrian compelled Antoninus to adopt Lucius Verus, the son of Aelius, and a nephew of Antoninus, Marcus Annus Verus, renamed Marcus Aurelius. Hadrian died later that same year.

The reign of Antoninus Plus (A.D. 138-161) was notable chiefly for its tranquility, although in Britain a new defensive line north of Hadrian's Wall was built to keep the Scottish tribes further at bay. Also notable was the long apprenticeship of Marcus Aurelius, who was named Caesar in A.D. 139. By the time of the death of Antoninus in A.D. 161, Marcus was thoroughly prepared to assume the burdens of office. As it turned out, they would prove to be considerable.

Upon his accession, Marcus Aurelius elevated his adoptive brother, Lucius Verus, to the position of co-emperor. Marcus, however, was clearly the supreme authority. Marcus was to spend much of his reign on campaign. Invasions of German tribes from the north and of Parthians from the east bedeviled the empire. Plague, brought back from the east by the army in A.D. 166, swept the empire (a second wave of plague carried Lucius Verus away in A.D. 169). Despite these shocks, Marcus was able to restore order on the eastern frontier and was poised to annex territories on the northern frontier at the time of his death A.D. 180. Marcus was succeeded by his son Commodus, thus breaking the pattern of succession through adoption. Commodus proved to be a despot. With his accession, Rome's greatest age came to an end. The assassination of Commodus at the end of the year A.D. 192 ushered in four years of civil war.

Due to recent purchases, we are able to offer a large selection of silver denarii of the "adoptive emperors."

Canada's Proposed $2 Coin Design Walks on the Wild Side

This coming February, the Royal Canadian Mint will set 60 million polar bears loose on the country's populace. Citizens will encounter the beasts on public transportation, at vending machines, and even in shops and restaurants. There likely will be no complaints, however, because Canadians themselves suggested Ursus maritimus grace their new, circulating $2 coin. In responding to a national survey, 65 percent of Canadians chose wildlife as the general theme for the coin's reverse design. "Some type of bear" was one of the most popular suggestions.

Designed by wildlife artist Brent Townsend, a Toronto native, the reverse of the bimetallic coin will feature a majestic rendering of the Canadian polar bear, a widely recognized symbol of Canada's wildlife heritage. The design was unveiled September 21 at the Metro Toronto Zoo by David Dingwall, Canada's minister of public works and government services, who noted that "the new coin is consistent with the government's overall cost-reduction strategy. With a 20-year life span, versus one year for the $2 note, taxpayers will save more than $250 million over 20 years." In keeping with tradition, the effigy of Queen Elizabeth II that appears on all circulating Canadian coins will be featured on the obverse.

Canadians are no strangers to wild animals. Aside from living in a country rich in diverse life forms and natural resources, they regularly encounter beavers, loons and caribou—at least on their pocket change. The $2 coin should give the ordinary spending experience some "bite."

Coinage of the American Federation Focus of 1995 ANS Conference

As part of its annual Coinage of the Americas series of conferences, the American Numismatic Society (ANS) presented "Coinage of the American Federation Period," a day-long seminar, on Saturday, October 28, at its headquarters in New York City. Dr. Philip L. Mossman, author of Money of the American Colonies and Confederation: A Numismatic, Economic and Historical Correlation, presided as chairman of the conference, which included talks by such notable authorities as Richard G. Doty, George Fuld, James H. Goudge, John M. Kleeberg, John Lorenzo, Eric P. Newman, Charles

K. Smith and Pete Smith.

One of the conference highlights was the ANS' special exhibit of counterfeit halfpence made by Machins' Mills of Newburgh, New York, and Brasher & Bailey and Mould & Atlee, both of New York City. Significant selections from private collections also were on display.

Wisconsin Company Strikes Gold in Annual Awards Competition

The Medalcraft Mint of Green Bay, Wisconsin, has been named the "Gold Award" winner in the "metal striking" category of the 1995 Supplier Achievement Awards sponsored by Promotional Products Association International. Medalcraft, a supplier of medals, medallions, coins, golf accessories and awards to the promotional-products industry, also received a "Gold Award" in the "calendar" category for its 1995 bronze calendar medallion titled The Turning of the Earth and Her Seasons.

This marks the eleventh time in 12 years the company has received first-place honors for its skill in striking. John Gregg, president of Medalcraft Mint, notes, "It is an honor to be recognized as a leader in our industry for being a quality-oriented supplier. Receiving this award for the eleventh time also marks a major milestone for us, and reinforces the fact that we are dedicated to providing beautifully designed and detailed work on a consistent basis." Medalcraft specializes in high-relief, die-struck products for various recognition programs and commemorative events around the country.

Wide Range of Medallic Art Exhibited at Cornell

The Herbert F. Johnson Museum of Art at Cornell University in Ithaca, New York, opened an extensive exhibit of medals on September 9. "The Marqusee Collection of American Medals" offered visitors a rare opportunity to see a broad range of medallic art dating from before the Civil War through World War II.

Donated by John E. Marqusee and his wife, Janet (both graduates of Cornell), the collection is divided into three, general categories: predominantly hand-engraved, early to mid 19th-century works (1815-80); Beaux-Arts or "Gilded Age" medals (1880-1918); and medals produced between the First and Second World Wars. The pieces commemorate great achievements in many areas, including architecture, engineering, science, politics and American history, while chronicling our country's social and cultural history. The works of such well-known American medalists as John Flanagan, James Earle Fraser, Daniel Chester French and Augustus Saint-Gaudens, among many others, are represented.

The forces that have shaped and changed medallic art over the years come into full focus when the pieces are considered chronologically. From the earliest, hand-engraved works to those produced with the aid of engraving and reducing machines, the Marqusee Collection tells the story not only of American medallic art, but also of America and her people.

Although the exhibit closed on November 5, those desiring more in-depth information about the art and history of the medals in the Marqusee Collection can order a 100-page, 8½ x 11-inch catalog, One Hundred Years of American Medallic Art: 1845-1945, which offers illustrations and detailed histories of the pieces and the artists who created them. To order a catalog, priced at $20 each (plus $3 postage),

Big State Has Big History, Many Notes to Keep

Texas is celebrating 150 years of statehood in 1995. The country's second-largest state, it spans more than 267,000 square miles. So where do Texans keep all the memorabilia commemorating the history and accomplishments of their "Lone Star State"? Some of it now can be viewed at the newly established Texas Heritage Archives and Library in Jefferson (the third-oldest town in the state), which is owned and operated by B.B. Barr, a man known for his passion for Texas and its heritage.

Among the items on exhibit at the museum are more than 600 maps of Texas and the Southwest, hundreds of first-edition books about the state and its people, and approximately 3,000 original bank notes. With the help of Johnny N. Rowe III, a numismatist and co-founder of the facility, Barr has assembled a significant overview of Texas' historical riches.

Of particular interest to numismatists is the "History of Banking" exhibit, which includes currency from nearly 570 banks in 330 towns across the state and is touted as the largest and most complete collection of its kind. Sponsored by the Texas Bankers Association, the exhibit features scrip dating from 1824 to 1935 and representing all periods of Texas' financial history. Also on display is currency from the Spanish "Empresarial Period."

Franklin's "New Look" Serves Practical Purposes

On September 27, the American public got its first glimpse of the Federal Reserve notes of the future when the United States Treasury unveiled the Series 1996 $100 bill,

The design of the Series 1996 $100 bill was unveiled in September at the United States Treasury, where U.S. Treasurer Mary Ellen Withrow, Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin and Federal Reserve Bank Chairman Alan Greenspan assured that existing U.S. paper money will not be affected when the new bill begins circulating.

which features an enlarged portrait of Benjamin Franklin, as well as numerous other changes. According to a report in the October 16 issue of Coin World, this new note represents "only the beginning of changes for all denominations of FRNs."

In addition to the larger, off-center portrait, the note contains many anti-counterfeiting devices that will be incorporated into other Series 1996 notes over the next few years. They include:

At the unveiling ceremony, held in the Cash Room at the Treasury, United States Treasurer Mary Ellen Withrow, Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin and Federal Reserve Bank Chairman Alan Greenspan assured those in attendance that there will be no demonetization or recall involving existing U.S. paper money.

"U.S. citizens are conservative," notes Robert J. Leuver, ANA executive director and former director of the BEP. "They don't like change. However, [they] do like new models (such as the latest-model automobile). I do not expect much of a problem in the United States regarding the exchange of new [currency] for old."

Leuver is concerned, however, with the counterfeiting of U.S. currency in foreign countries, and finds the redesign a necessary measure. "U.S. currency is at risk. Something dramatic and decisive has to be done to protect [it], particularly abroad, where two thirds of all $100 bills are circulated or hoarded," he says.

The introduction of the high-tech, $100 note marks the first time in 67 years that American paper money has undergone a major design change. According to reports, more than 22 million Series 1996 $100 Federal Reserve notes already have been printed and will begin circulating in early 1996.

According to Mint Director Philip N. Diehl, the catalog's new, larger format allows the Mint to compete with publications of other, more gift-oriented companies. "Our long-standing catalog customers . . . recognize that Mint products belong in the same category as fine crystal, figurines and first-edition books," he notes. Indeed, the products in the 1995 catalog are artfully juxtaposed with such items as leather-bound books, stained-glass lamps and other upscale home and office collectibles.

The highlight of the 1995 catalog is the growing line of jewelry and accessories made from circulating commemoratives. Among the more "fashionable" items offered are pendants, cuff links and earrings.

The 1995 United States Mint gift catalog has a new look and an exciting lineup of products for collectors.

The catalog also introduces two of the Mint's newest items: the deluxe uncirculated set and Kennedy set. The former upgrades the 10-coin set from the Denver and Philadelphia facilities with a high-gloss presentation packet, including biographies of presidents featured on circulating coins. The latter pairs a clad John F. Kennedy Proof half dollar with a Special Olympics Proof silver dollar featuring Eunice Kennedy Shriver, JFK's sister and founder of the Special Olympics movement.

A recent survey shows that 87 percent of U.S. Mint customers rate the institution "very good" or "excellent" as a supplier of commemorative, bullion and numismatic products. Respondents also gave the Mint high marks in nine areas: service, product quality, price, information about new products and services, responsiveness, order accuracy, on-time delivery, reliability of delivery and handling of complaints. •

Celebrating the Centennial of Biltmore Estate

A variety of medals and artworks recall the elegance of this awe-inspiring mansion and the mastery of the men who built it.

by Marilyn A. Reback
ANA 129422

CHRISTMAS EVE 1895 held special meaning for George Washington Vanderbilt—his family and friends had come by private rail car to celebrate the holiday at his newly built estate in the mountains of western North Carolina. His retreat was the latest and most spectacular of a series of homes built by the Vanderbilt clan. He named it “Biltmore” (from Bildt, the area of Holand where the Vanderbilt family originated, and more, the Old English word for “rolling upland country”).

George was born on November 18, 1862, the youngest of William Henry and Sophia Vanderbilt’s eight children and a grandson of “Commodore” Cornelius Vanderbilt, who established the family fortune through shipping and railroad ventures. Upon his grandfather’s death in 1877, George inherited $1 million; his father gave him a like amount on his 21st birthday. When his father died in 1885 after further increasing the family fortune, George inherited $5 million in cash, plus a trust fund for another $5 million. He used most of his personal fortune to build his country estate.

A rather quiet young man, George Vanderbilt had little interest in the family business or the social world. Notes Louis Auchincloss in The Vanderbilt Era, “He grew up to be something of a scholar, deeply interested in languages and in esoteric literature, and prone to cultivate the society of artists and writers," such as John Singer Sargent, James McNeill Whistler and Edith Wharton. His love of knowledge developed into a passion for collecting—primarily books and decorative art objects (he also assembled a set of "royalty cards"). He began journeying abroad at an early age, and during his travels he acquired not only an eclectic mix of collectibles, but also ideas for building his own European-style estate.

Hunt and Olmsted

GEORGE BEGAN PURCHASING land in 1888 after a visit to Asheville, North Carolina, an area popular for its clear air, mild climate and nearby hot springs. Over time he bought 125,000 acres there. To bring the estate he envisioned to life, the young Vanderbilt retained two men, each a recognized leader in his field: architect Richard Morris Hunt (1828-95) modeled the 255-room Biltmore House after the style of 16th-century French Renaissance châteaux in the Loire valley, while landscape designer Frederick Law Olmsted (1822-1903) laid out his last and largest project, Biltmore's grounds and gardens.

Born in Vermont and schooled in Europe, primarily in Paris at the École des Beaux-Arts, Hunt returned to the United States just before the Civil War to set up an American office. Many of his works are well-known historical landmarks, among them the base of the Statue of Liberty, the Tribune Building in New York, the National Observatory in Washington, D.C., and the Fogg museum at Harvard University. Before he arrived in Asheville, Hunt had created the Breakers and Marble House in Newport, Rhode Island, for other members of the Vanderbilt family.

Numismatists know one of Hunt's major works from pieces commemorating the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. His Administration Building, which won the gold medal of the Institute of British Architects, is depicted on a number of medals and tokens. Many are cataloged by Nathan N. Eglt in Columbiana: The Medallion History of Christopher Columbus and the Columbian Exposition of 1893 (Numbers 10, 21, 27, 28, 37, 43, 54, 58, 92, 115, 118, 134, 135, 147, 156, 157, 311, 321, 340, 449, 464, 546, 583 and 585).

Vanderbilt commissioned Sargent to paint Hunt; the portrait still hangs in a prominent place at Biltmore. A bust of Hunt appears on a 620mm, bronze cast of a medallion by sculptor Karl Bitter, set in the wall of Marble House. Its inscription reads A•D•1891•RICH•MORRIS •HUNT• and KARL BITTER SCULPTOR. On the truncation of the bust is HENRY BONNARD BRONZE CO/NEW YORK 1891.

Frederick Law Olmsted came to Biltmore with an impressive list of achievements in landscape architecture: New York's Central Park brought him most renown, but he also designed Riverside Park (New York), Prospect Park (Brooklyn), Mount Royal Park (Montreal), South Park (Chicago), and parks and parkways in Boston. He also is credited with the grounds surrounding the Capitol in Washington, D.C., and those of the universities of Stanford, Cornell and Amherst.

If that were not enough, Olmsted's experience extended far beyond the world of landscaping. He had been a sailor, farmer, reporter for the New York Daily Times and also involved in the publishing business. He wrote the abolitionist book Cotton Kingdom and was praised for his service as secretary of the United States Sanitary Commission during the Civil War. He worked for the preservation of Niagara Falls and was the first commissioner of the national park of the Yosemite. Like Hunt, he was involved in the World's Columbian Exposition, having created the layout of the fairgrounds on Chicago's lakefront.

At Biltmore, Olmsted brought in Gifford Pinchot (1865-1946) to take charge of its extensive forests, which had been overfarmed and overlogged. After graduating from Yale University, Pinchot had studied forestry management in France and Germany, since there was no such school in the United States at the time. (A Biltmore School of Forestry later was founded.) The first trained forester in the United States, Pinchot planned and supervised the restoration of Biltmore's woodlands.

During the Civil War, Olmsted served as secretary of the United States Sanitary Commission, which worked to improve conditions for wounded Union soldiers. The token above was issued in conjunction with a fund-raising "Sanitary Fair" held in New York City in 1864.

Both Gifford Pinchot (left) and Frederick Law Olmsted (right, portrayed at Biltmore by Sargent) led conservation efforts. Pinchot headed the forest service system under Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft. Olmsted was the first commissioner of the national park of the Yosemite, which was the subject of a centennial medal (far right) authorized by Congress in 1990 and struck by the United States Mint.

Viennese-born artist Karl Bitter (above) was responsible for most of the decorative sculpture at Biltmore. His spirited bronze-and-marble fountain Boy with Geese is the focal point of the Winter Garden (right).

When his job for Vanderbilt was complete, Pinchot continued his conservation work. In 1898 he was appointed chief forester of the United States. He headed the forest service system until 1910, serving under three Presidents: William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and William Taft. In the world of politics, he helped found the Bull Moose Party in 1912 and was governor of Pennsylvania from 1923 to 1927 and 1931 to 1935.

An Art-Lover's Treasures

MORE THAN A spectacular house and grounds awaited visitors to Biltmore Estate at Christmas in 1895. The house was brimming with works of art—some George had acquired by inheritance and in the course of his travels, others were created specifically for Biltmore. Visitors could (and still can) relish engravings by Albrecht Dürer, paintings by Boldini and Renoir, magnificent 16th-century Flemish tapestries, Napoleon's chess set, and Cardinal Richelieu's wall hangings.

The works of sculptor Karl Bitter are found throughout the house. Born in 1867 in Vienna, Bitter worked on public buildings in Austria before coming to America in 1889. Sponsored by Richard Morris Hunt, he had his own studio within a year, having worked on carved decorations in Hunt's Administration Building for the Columbian Exposition. For Vanderbilt's North Carolina estate, Bitter created the central fountain, Boy with Geese, which enlivens the Winter Garden. In Biltmore's massive Banquet Hall are his Return from the Chase over the triple fireplace, scenes from Wagner's opera Tannhäuser on the organ gallery, and statues of Joan of Arc and St. Louis over the entrance. His andirons representing Vulcan and Venus grace the library. These and other works epitomize his belief, explained by Ferdinand Schevill in Karl Bitter: A Biography, that "the artist's immediate concern was to enhance man's environment by adding beauty to utility."

Bitter's influence spread when he served as director of sculpture for the 1901 Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, the 1904 St. Louis World's Fair and the 1915 Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco. (He was awarded gold medals in the Fine Arts Department at the Pan-American Exposition and at the St. Louis fair.) He was president of the National Sculpture Society from 1906-08 and 1914-15. In the May 1895 issue of The Numismatist, Vanderbilt and Hunt were reported to be members of the Society, which in response to criticism of United States coinage motifs, sponsored a silver dollar design competition ("Uncle Sam's Ugly Dollar").

A top engraver was commissioned to create a bookplate for Vanderbilt's prized book collection. From George's ideas, engraver Edwin Davis French designed a bookplate that features a "lamp of knowledge" motif, which is repeated throughout the library at Biltmore. French designed and engraved more than 240 bookplates, mostly for private owners, but also for clubs and institutions, such as the Grolier Club and New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art. He engraved a series of views of New York buildings, as well as a number of title pages and certificate plates.

Among the treasures in George Vanderbilt's library are 29 gilded volumes originally collected at Holland House, for two centuries a gathering place for some of Britain's most famous thinkers, leaders and philosophers. Inserted among the pages of text in History of Holland House are rare manuscripts, letters, prints, etchings and documents, including correspondence from Queen Elizabeth I, Napoleon, Lafayette and Lord Byron.

Biltmore Village

VANDERBILT PLANNED BILTMORE as a self-sufficient estate. Fruits, vegetables and grains were raised on its farms. It became a source of dairy products, meat, lumber and nursery plants. After the European fashion, the estate also boasted its own village. In 1889 George purchased the small, nearby town of Best and renamed it Biltmore Village. Olmsted laid out the fan-shaped street plan, with Hunt's All Souls Church at its hub. Its cottages were outfitted with plumbing and central heating. The village was the site of the Biltmore Oteen Bank, for which capital stock was issued in 1923. The bank closed its doors in 1930.

cations following an appendectomy. A large part of the estate's forests were sold to the United States Forest Service the following year. (They now are part of Pisgah National Forest.)

Ten years later, Cornelia wed the Honorable John Francis Amherst Cecil, a descendant of Britain's William Cecil (1520-98), Lord Burghley, who served as Lord High Treasurer to Queen Elizabeth I. The couple's two sons, George Henry Vanderbilt Cecil and William Amherst Vanderbilt Cecil, inherited the estate upon her death, and William Cecil owns and manages it today.

Sasanian Motifs and Turkoman Bronzes

The intriguing figures found on Turkoman bronze coins indicate a blending of traditional Islamic and Sasanian designs.

THE PRODUCTS OF certain Islamic rulers from the 12th and 13th centuries, Turkoman figural bronze coins likely are of interest to all numismatists, but more so to classical numismatists, as these pieces continue the traditions of antiquity (much in the same manner as the Italian medalists of the Renaissance). Most of these coins are large, described variously as copper or bronze, and are about the size of early Roman sestertii or late Byzantine folles (indeed, the anonymous folles of the 11th century are near-contemporaries of the Turkoman series). Dating from the time of the Crusades, these bronzes have no peer in their era.

The classification "Turkoman" is derived from the fact that the issuers were descended from Turkic peoples who emigrated from north of the Caucasus to the general area of Persia. The major ruling houses that contributed to the series were the Seljuks of Rum (Anatolia, 1077-1248); the Artuqids (a Mesopotamian dynasty) of Mardin (1102-1408), Hisn Kayfa and Amid (1102-1232) and Khartpert (to 1234); the Zangids (an Iraqi dynasty) of Mosul (1127-1260), Aleppo (1127-81), Sinjar (1171-98) and al-Jazirah (1180-1250); the Atabegs of Arbela (1144-90); and the Ayyubids of al-Jazirah (in Mesopotamia). There also are figural bronzes from some of the minor dynasties in what is now Afghanistan.

One of the most intriguing features of these coins is their striking use of figural representations—images of apparently real persons—as well as various astral and zoomorphic (animal in form) motifs. How do we account for such representations? Apart from the Arab-

The Sasanian-style figures found on this gilt dish from 7th- to 8th-century Tabaristan (above) are echoed in the designs of many Turkoman bronzes, derived from this dirham (left) of King Shapur I (241-72), a ruler known for his success on the battlefield.

IT IS A general characteristic of Islamic public art, best exemplified in the architecture of mosques and the design of coins, to avoid representations of living figures.

Byzantine and Arab-Sasanian series dating from the earliest days of Islam, inscriptional designs (usually the kalima—from the creed of Islam, passages from the Koran, or the issuer's pedigree and allegiances) are the norm for Islamic coins.

It is a general characteristic of Islamic public art, best exemplified in the architecture of mosques and the design of coins, to avoid representations of living figures. This apparent prohibition is not based on any particular passage in the Koran, but arises from tradition and is encoded in the Hadith (the Islamic guide to tradition). Such a hostility to figural representation was not present at the beginning of Islam, but became apparent as early as the design of the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem (which was founded by Caliph Abd al-Malik in 687), and had spread to much of the Islamic world by the 9th century.

In private art, however, such opposition to figural representation is absent, as is readily evident in the manuscripts, miniatures, paintings, pottery and metalwork produced during every dynasty from the beginning of Islam to the period of our focus. In the 12th century, there was a commonality of religion, a widespread reliance on astrology, and, most germane to the present consideration, a love of and respect for antiquity. In their seminal work on Turkoman figural coins, Turkoman Figural Bronze Coins and Their Iconography, William F. Spengler and Wayne G. Sayles provide astrological and art-historical analyses of the coins in the Artuqid series. One of their major conclusions is that these coins have a very strong astrological element. The authors apply the work of art historians (in particular, Willy Hartner and his study of the dragon symbol) to numismatics, and argue incontestably that the Artuqid series has a pervasive astrological content. In light of this approach, the figures on these coins do not depict real people; rather, they are astrological representations. Spengler and Sayles further note, as do other scholars, that for Islamic artists and patrons, antiquity was represented by the arts of the Hellenistic Greeks, the Romans and the Sasanians.

Of these three societies, the Sasanians had the least impact on the culture of the West. This is to be expected, as the Sasanian empire, which lasted from the 3rd to the 7th century and encompassed the area from the "fertile crescent" to the Hindu Kush, was the enemy of Rome and Byzantium and definitely was Eastern in terms of geopolitical influence. Also, of great detriment to the memory of the Sasanians is that they left no great ruins, such as those found in the Greek and Roman worlds; their history is very much a victim of their inhospitable climate.

William F. Spengler and Wayne G. Sayles, co-authors of Turkoman Figural Bronze Coins and Their Iconography, have found very strong astrological elements on coins of the Artuqid series, including the issues of Najm al-Din Alpi (A.D. 1152-76), which often feature depictions of Castor and Pollux (the Gemini).

Sasanian seals found in the ruins of Qasr-i Abu Nasr (the castle of Abu Nasr) in Iran feature three elements that connect them directly to Turkoman bronze motifs: the use of mythological images, the depiction of actual rulers and the portrayal of animals.

Sasanian art, as represented in surviving sculptures, jewels and metalworks, has a distinct mode of presenting the human figure, of capturing the attitude of animals (particularly horses and lions) and of displaying decorative design. To better appreciate some designs on Turkoman figural bronzes, it is helpful to review the Sasanian tradition in Islamic art by considering a few, pertinent examples.

The bastion reliefs at the Palace of Mshatta (A.D. 743) show a Sasanian influence, and the wall paintings in the Palace of Khirbal al-Mafjah (A.D. 743) contain figures that are Sasanian in style and subject (hunting scenes). In Samarra, at the harem built by Caliph al-Mustasim (A.D. 833-41), Sasanian-style animals and birds are found on wall medallions. Also, residing in the Hermitage Museum in St. Petersburg, Russia, is a 9th- to 10th-century dish that depicts an attack on a fortress. This piece appears to be Islamic, but is almost purely Sasanian in style. Lastly, the lustreware of Persia under the Seljuks (particularly from Rayy in the 12th and 13th centuries) incorporates human figures and animals (horses, lions and hyenas) in the Sasanian style.

In writing about the Ayyubid figural coins, numismatic scholar Paul Balog notes that these representations of humans and animals are restricted to the issues of al-Jazirah (Mesopotamia in general) and always are rendered in copper. One notable variety, issued at Mayafariqin in al-Jazirah by al-Ahwal Najm al-Din Ayyub ibn al-Adil I (1199-1210) and al-Ashraf Musa I (1210-20), is described as featuring Saladin's bust with a Sasanian crown. Balog traces this and other pieces in the Ayyubid series to Artuqid prototypes.

Perhaps the clearest Artuqid homage to the Sasanians is preserved on a dirham of Qutb al-din Sukman II ibn Muhammad of Hisn Kayfa and Amid, which portrays a Sasanian-style profile bust of a king, facing left, diademed and wearing a four-pointed crown. The prototype for this coin is a silver dirham of the Sasanian king Shapur I (241-72), who was regarded by his people, as well as the later inhabitants of the region, as an almost legendary figure for his battlefield successes (particularly against the Romans, for it was he who captured and humiliated the emperor Valerian). From a numismatic viewpoint, Shapur I is noteworthy for introducing the Sasanian dirham reverse design with fire altar and attendants, which became standard until the end of the Sasanian empire.

By expanding exploration of the Sasanian connection, a whole new avenue for prototypes of Turkoman figural bronzes is opened. That a Sasanian influence clearly contributed to these coins, as well as to the larger body of Islamic art, can be seen through focusing on Sasanian seals. These seals have much in common with coins: their imprints tend to be rounded, they bear depictions of humans, animals, plants and other designs, and they are inscribed with text. Also, it is possible to see the same astrological elements in Sasanian seals that Spengler and Sayles found in Turkoman coins. The relationship between Sasanian seals and Turkoman figural bronzes is easily demonstrated.

Consider the seals from the Sasanian town near what today is Qasr-i Abu Nasr. This site may be the location of ancient Shiraz, which was conquered by the Saffarid ruler Ya'qub ibn Laith in about 870. Excavations there have centered on the fortress, which included a chahar taq, or Zoroastrian fire temple. In addition to nearly 500 seals, an assortment of glassware and jewelry were found, together with a quantity of coins (Sasanian, Arab-Sasanian, and Islamic issues of the Abbasid, Seljuk, Ilkhanid and Muzaffarid dynasties). Assuming that Turkoman die cutters had a knowledge of their predecessors' work in seal-making, at least three elements encountered in Sasanian seals are directly connected to motifs observed on Turkoman figural bronzes: portrayal of the mythological, depiction of an apparently actual ruler (noble or king) and use of animal images.

For example, the twins Castor and Pollux (known as the "Gemini" or "Dioscuri") appear on one Sasanian seal, represented by right-facing, conjoined male busts. This design is similar to that on coins of the Roman city of Flavianopolis in Cilicia, which also featured the Gemini. As interpreted by the Artuqids of Mardin, the Gemini are depicted in two ways. The first features two diademed, male heads in profile, facing one another, with no date or mint indicated. The second depicts two facing, diademed busts, with no mint, but bearing dates from 1162 to 1174. Both types were issued by Najm al-Din Alpi (1152-76). Since this motif combines the Hellenistic, Roman and Sasanian, as well as the mythological and astrological, for the Artuqids such figures clearly would not have represented real personages; thus, it would be free of the traditional proscription in the Hadith.

Coins (from top) of the Seljuks of Rum, Ayyubids of al-Jazirah and Zangids of Sinjar feature human, astral and zoomorphic figures that resemble those found on Sasanian artwork, such as this 6th- to 7th-century silver vase.

THE THIRD, AND most prevalent, motif in the Sasanian seals is the zoomorphic. . . . seal cutters perpetuated these symbols, which have deep, historical roots.

The second motif is represented by a seal depicting a facing bust of a noble in Sasanian garb and headgear, with a sun and moon, surrounded by an inscription. This piece recalls the gold dinars and silver dirhams with the facing bust of the Sasanian king Xusro II. On certain bronze dirhams of Husam al-Din Yuluq Arslan (1184-1201), the Artuqids of Mardin present a variation on this specific theme, featuring a facing bust of a king with a hand on his chest. These date from 1185 to 1190. Spengler and Sayles interpret this design as reflective of Helios (a numismatic and astrological reference). The facing bust, then, is a design more likely to have been used on seals than coins, as there are more instances of the former than the latter in the Sasanian tradition.

The third, and most prevalent, motif in Sasanian seals is the zoomorphic. To narrow the scope, there are numerous examples of lions, often accompanied by the sun and moon. The sun-and-lion combination stands for the Sun in Leo, a particularly powerful astrological conjunction. In ancient Mesopotamia, the lion was symbolic of the fiercest kings and deities, especially Ninurta or Inana. In the Akkadian period (2400-2200 B.C.), the lion was known as an attribute of the warlike goddess Ishtar; a standing-lion seal (a boast of power) from the Third Dynasty of Ur (2168-2050 B.C.) was found at Girsu. Sasanian seal cutters perpetuated these symbols, which have deep, historical roots.

One Sasanian seal in particular features a walking lion with the sun and moon. The Artuqids of Mardin, under Shams al-Din Salih (1312-64), issued a coin (fals) in this design, which is quite rare. The lion and sun appear as details in many Islamic astrological depictions, one of the most excellent examples of which is an inlaid, metal penbox crafted by Mahmud ibn Samqur (1211-12). In time this motif became symbolic of Persia, and continued to appear in numismatic representations,

Spengler and Sayles interpret the design on this dirham of Husam al-Din Yuluq Arslan (1184-1201) as Helios, the Greek name for the sun and sun god.

The feline form figures prominently in the Artuqid series. This dirham of Nasir al-Din Artuq Arslan (A.D. 1201-39) depicts a rider sitting side-saddle on a leopard. The big cat has long been a symbol of strength and appears on many Islamic coins.

The Gold Eagles of 1799 with Small Obverse Stars

Die varieties of these rare $10 gold pieces provide a unique opportunity to study the United States Mint's early production techniques.

by David Kenny
ANA 164747

THE UNITED STATES minted its first series of gold eagles from 1795 to 1804. The new $10 denomination was mandated by the Coinage Act of April 2, 1792, which also specified its general design. The obverse displayed the goddess Liberty as a fashionably dressed woman in contemporary attire, surrounded by stars, the word LIBERTY and the date. The reverse bore an eagle.

While some references have been made to the significance of Miss Liberty's hat, the design's derivation is best described in a letter written by Mint Director Samuel Moore to former President Thomas Jefferson in 1825:

The character of the "impression emblematic of Liberty" on our coins, does not appear, from any record I have seen, to have been determined by specific instruction for the government; nor has it been settled by any uniform practice here. . . . The first Gold coins were struck in 1795. The head on them was, from the first, ornamented with a cap head dress; not the Liberty cap in form, but probably conforming to the fashionable dress of the day. This continued until 1808, when the headdress of the gold coins was conformed to that adopted on the silver. . . . It seems expedient, if indeed there is not an official obligation, to complete the series of our dies, and the unsettled question of what is the proper emblem of Liberty, for our coins, is entitled to consideration before a new original die of our money is prepared. . . . Was the cap of liberty adopted or alluded to as the fit emblem by any act of the confederation, or of any of the states, or by popular usage, during the revolution, or previously to 1792, so that this device may be supposed to have been intended? . . . If the Liberty cap can be the emblem intended in the Law, or if it be deemed an Americanized and suitable emblem, is it proper to place it on the head of the figure personifying Liberty?

The cap adorning Miss Liberty on early U.S. gold coinage (left) resembles that worn by French revolutionaries, shown here confronting King Louis XVI in the Tuileries. The angry mob replaced the monarch's diadem with the characteristic red cap of the Jacobins.

This unique die trial in copper, which was defaced at the Mint, represents the "X-A" variety, the first in a sequence of 1799 $10 gold pieces bearing small stars on the obverse.

Jefferson answered that the liberty cap was never worn by Liberty herself, but was given to freed slaves. Accordingly, since Americans (at least the landed, Anglo-Saxon gentry) had not been slaves, it would not have been proper for the goddess to wear the cap. Furthermore, he could not recall any official or unofficial representation of Liberty before she appeared on the pattern coins of 1792.

In the October 1954 issue of The Numismatist, A.F. Pradeau relates the use of the liberty (or "Phrygian") cap as a symbol of freedom in Western Europe. It was employed by the Dutch in the late 16th century during their struggle with Philip II of Spain, and again by the Jacobins during the French Revolution in 1789. Upon the removal of King Louis XVI in 1792, the cap became the official badge of the patriot. This historic, sympathetic revolution led to depicting the cap on a pole behind the head of Liberty on U.S. copper coinage, as well as on copper, silver and gold coinage of the liberated countries of South America.

However, in 1830, only five years after Jefferson's correspondence, the French painter Eugene Delacroix created an image of Liberty Guiding the People, which clearly depicts a bare-breasted Miss Liberty wearing a Phrygian cap. It probably is this famous depiction of Liberty, rendered with considerable artistic license, that has been responsible for the confusion about the symbolism of the "freed slaves' cap" versus that worn by Liberty, which Jefferson indicated was improper. ANOTHER CURIOUS FEATURE of the Heraldic Eagle reverse . . . is the antagonistic posture of the eagle, which grips the arrows of war in its right talon . . .

and the stylish, 18th-century hat Liberty wears on gold coinage should not be confused.

Originally, the reverse device was derived from a design carved on an ancient Roman onyx cameo from the first century B.C.E. An eagle with outstretched wings stands on a palm branch, holding a circular wreath in its beak. (The eagle on the Roman prototype stands right with wings spread.)

In response to a desire for a national coinage that was more in accord with that of other countries, the reverse design ultimately was adapted from The Great Seal of the United States. The Heraldic Eagle effectively emulated the coats of arms found on the reverses of most European coinage of the 18th century. This reverse was first introduced on quarter eagles ($2½) in 1796 and on eagles in 1797.

Interestingly, the first quarter eagle Heraldic reverse depicts the 16 stripes in the shield as alternating, raised and recessed, solid bars. In heraldic symbolism, solid bars denote silver or white. By the time the device was used on the $10 gold coins, the number of stripes had been reduced to 13, and the raised bars were ruled, denoting the proper color (red). According to some experts, the use of solid bars for all 16 stripes might have been due to the small size of the coin and a lack of experience on the part of the engraver.

Another curious feature of the Heraldic Eagle reverse, as noted by many authors in the past, is the antagonistic posture of the eagle, which grips the arrows of war in its right talon and the olive branch of peace in its left. While this frequently has been viewed as subtle saber-rattling on the part of the new nation (America might have wished to present a more forceful image in an effort to avoid involvement in the war in Europe), the eagle's warlike disposition more likely was the result of the same type of error that produced the shield with silver and white stripes. Perhaps the symbols of war and peace were reversed by a dyslexic engraver (thought to be John Gardner). Alternatively, the transposition could have been due to a basic lack of knowledge of heraldic iconography.

In 1797 the quantity of obverse stars on the eagle was set at 13, though old dies with differing counts continued to be used for a year or more afterward. Limiting the number of stars to 13 (representing the original American colonies) was necessary, as it had become apparent that adding stars as new states joined the Union would soon crowd the obverse legends and date.

Very few eagles were struck in 1798, the last being delivered on February 28. Previously, these were thought to be 1798/7 overdates. However, new data presented by Anthony Taraszka in the John Reich Journal regarding the occurrence of die breaks on the reverse of the 1797 and 1798/7 eagles shows that the last eagles minted prior to 1799 were dated 1797, with 16 obverse stars. The first of the 13-star-obverse eagles, which were dated 1798/7, are known in two varieties: one with 9 stars on the left and 4 on the right ("9 x 4"), the other with 7 stars on the left and 6 on the right ("7 x 6"). Both apparently were abandoned shortly after they were introduced. (It is suspected the placement of the stars led to rapid deterioration of the dies, as evidenced by Taraszka's determination of the usage sequence of 1798/7 eagle obverse dies.) In any event, the minting of eagles was curtailed for 14 months, during which time an "8 x 5" arrangement of stars was adopted. The next delivery of eagles occurred on May 14, 1799.

Changes in the designs of early eagles also are evidenced by a die-trial piece struck in copper from the first set of 1799 eagle dies (listed and illustrated in J. Hewitt Judd's reference United States Pattern, Experimental and Trial Pieces as J-26). Besides bearing the new "8 x 5" star arrangement on the obverse, the piece carried a revised shield with six ruled (red) and seven solid (white) stripes, instead of seven ruled and six solid.

Walter Breen references this unique strike in his monographs entitled

BREEN OBVIOUSLY WAS knowledgeable about the dies used to produce the die-trial piece, but failed to realize the obverse die was distinctly different . . .

United States Eagles and Early United States Half Eagles, 1795-1838, which describe the characteristics and rarity of each variety. He determined this particular example represented the “wide date, small stars” variety, on which the numerals in the date are loosely though evenly spaced. (Two varieties of 1799 eagles—Breen 5-F and 5-G—have large obverse stars, a design element that continued through 1804).

Breen obviously was knowledgeable about the dies used to produce the die-trial piece, but failed to realize the obverse die was distinctly different from the second obverse die used for 1799 eagles (which he called “1799 Breen 1-A”). For Lester Merkin’s February 1972 sale, Breen cataloged a 1799 eagle (Lot 433) as a “1-A” variety.

In a 1989 exhibition at American Numismatic Society headquarters in New York City, Harry W. Bass Jr., who acquired the Merkin coin, showed that it and Breen’s 1-A variety shared the same reverse die, but not the obverse die. By analyzing the die cracks on the reverse, Bass determined that the Merkin coin was struck before the 1-A variety from the same dies as the copper die-trial piece. Existing specimens of both varieties of the “wide date, small stars” 1799 eagles show die cracks on the obverse. The reverses indicate that the reverse die became cracked only when struck as the 1-A variety. The copper die-trial piece was produced from dies that had not yet developed cracks, thus indicating it was, in all probability, the first strike. Bass dubbed the new variety “1799 X-A.”

The early demise of Bass’ “X” and Breen’s “1” obverse dies, both of which have the “8 x 5” configuration, also might have been due to whatever caused the failure of the 1798/7 obverse dies. An analysis of the warrants for eagles delivered in 1799 indicates that the first delivery after the shipment of 1797 and 1798/7 eagles constituted 7,582 coins. By comparing the survival rate of the eight varieties of 1799 eagles that have small obverse stars to the projected mintage, we can extrapolate that this delivery accounted for all the coins produced from the first four obverse dies (4,600) and part of the production from the fifth obverse die (2,982).

A third obverse with the date 1799 was paired with the reverse used for the two evenly spaced, wide-date varieties. This variety can be distinguished by the spacing of the date (wherein the 1 and 7 are slightly closer together) and by the presence of different die cracks. The fourth obverse to be paired with the original reverse die was the "close date" variety of 1799, on which the numerals in the date are tightly spaced and appear to be jammed to the left of the space below the bust.

Breen’s “2-A” variety of 1799 eagle displays a severe die break through the cap. The crack led to early die failure, probably after fewer than 1,000 pieces were struck. On actual specimens, the cracks in the shield and from stem to tail are plainly visible.

The "close date" obverse die (Breen "3") failed because of a severe break at the back of Miss Liberty's cap. Here this obverse is paired with reverse die "B," which was used later with the "irregular date" obverse, the last obverse die produced for this design type.

The "close date" obverse also is paired with a second reverse die that was used to mint the majority of the "close date" 1799 eagles. This reverse die, designated "C" by Walter Breen, is characterized by a rust lump in the shield just above the right edge of the tail. After striking almost 2,000 coins, this die broke and was replaced by a third reverse die, which likewise was used with the "close date" obverse. This die was called "B" by Breen (who had not yet determined the correct die-use sequence) and was used to strike very few "close date" eagles, perhaps less than a couple hundred.

After producing more than 3,000 coins, the "close date" obverse die broke and was replaced by a fifth variety of obverse die. The technical problems the Mint was having with the "8 x 5" arrangement of stars on the obverse apparently had been solved with the introduction of the "close date" design (although some have suggested the problems with the dies resulted from the steel used for them, rather than from the layout of the stars or the spacing of the date). The fifth obverse variety displayed is readily distinguished by its date, the numerals of which are out of vertical alignment.

This "irregular date" 1799 eagle first was paired with a new reverse die, the fourth to be used for this date. Apparently a die crack inside the C of AMERICA, which is evident on all specimens known to this author,

Black Tie Invited

The Patton-Lapp Connection

THIS YEAR AMERICANS have taken note of the 50th anniversary of many events associated with World War II. The December 1945 death of General George S. Patton has a numismatic connection also worth remembering.

George Smith Patton, the third in line with that name, was born on November 11, 1885, in San Gabriel, California. His family had a history of distinguished military service dating back to ancestor and Revolutionary War General Hugh Mercer. The first George Smith Patton served as a colonel with the Confederate 22nd Virginia Infantry and died of wounds received in 1864 at the Battle of Winchester. John Mercer Patton served the State of Virginia as a congressman.

General George S. Patton's mother, Ruth Wilson Patton, was a descendent of Benjamin Davis Wilson, the first mayor of Los Angeles. George married Beatrice Banning Ayer on May 26, 1910. They had three children, including George S. Patton IV.

George Patton III grew up on the Wilson family ranch and spent much of his childhood hunting, fishing and riding horses. He did not start school until age 12, and had difficulty with spelling and mathematics. Both Patton's grandfather and father graduated from Virginia Military Institute. George enrolled there in September 1903, but left in 1904 after receiving an appointment to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. It took him five years to complete the four-year course, and he graduated in 1909, 46th in a class of 103. Later, as a commissioned officer, Patton competed in polo matches and horse shows. He represented his country at the 1912

Olympic Games in Stockholm and finished fifth in the pentathlon.

In 1916 Patton served as an aide to General John J. Pershing during an expedition to Mexico to subdue Pancho Villa. He led a motorized patrol, marking the U.S. Army's first combat use of automobiles. Patton attracted the attention of military officials when he killed three of Villa's bodyguards in a gunfight.

The First World War gave Patton an opportunity for advancement. In May 1917, Captain Patton sailed for France to study French and British tank tactics. As a major, he organized the American Tank Center at Langres, France, and formed the 304th Brigade of the Tank Corps. As a lieutenant colonel, he was wounded at the Argonne on September 26, 1918, taking him out of action for the duration of the war.

For his valor in WWI, Patton received the Distinguished Service Medal and Distinguished Service Cross, but the honors bestowed on him were not just military awards. In 1923 he rescued three boys from drowning in Salem Harbor, Massachusetts, and received the Congressional Medal for Lifesaving.

Patton served under General Douglas MacArthur in the 1932 eviction of the "Bonus Army"—World War I veterans who gathered to lobby for financial relief during the Depression—from their "camp" in Washington, D.C.

At the beginning of World War II, the U.S. Army needed to build a tank force to counter the German threat. Patton assumed command of the 2nd Armored Division at Fort Benning, Georgia, in July 1940. As a major general, he became division commander in April 1941 and in January 1942 became commanding general of the I Armored Corps.

Under General George S. Patton, the forces moved fast, exploiting the enemy's weaknesses. On November 8, 1942, Allied troops under General Dwight D. Eisenhower landed in North Africa. Patton commanded the amphibious landing near Casablanca in French Morocco. He later took over the II Armored Corps, rebuilding its strength and morale after earlier defeats.

Patton was lieutenant general in command of the U.S. Seventh Army that invaded Sicily on July 11, 1943, along with the British Eighth Army under General Bernard L. Montgomery. The island was conquered in 38 days.

Patton almost lost his command after an incident on August 10, 1943. While touring a military hospital in Sicily, he came upon two soldiers suffering not from injuries, but from battle fatigue. He accused them of cowardice and malingering, and slapped one across the face with his leather gloves. Although Patton's action drew public disapproval, General Eisenhower could not get along without him.

In June 1944, the Allies landed in France—the D-Day invasion. Patton's Third Army drove west, south and east through German lines and reached the Seine River on August 21. That autumn his Army outran its logistical support and stalled.

The Germans launched a counter-attack (the Battle of the Bulge) in December. Patton quickly turned his army north, with one division moving 125 miles in 24 hours. The Third Army attacked the southern side of the German salient and relieved American troops surrounded at Bastogne. Patton's army moved farther and faster, and engaged more enemy divisions, than any other army in American history.

The Third Army crossed the Rhine in March 1945. Patton was horrified by what they found when they liberated the first concentration camp at Ohrdruf. He was promoted to four-star general in April 1945; the war in Europe ended the following month.

Patton feared a takeover of Europe by Russian communists. In private, he suggested an American alliance with the Germans to drive the Russians out of Europe. He also supported retention of former Nazis in administrative jobs in German government. At a news conference on September 22, 1945, he expressed opinions that were not "politically correct" and was removed from command of the Third Army. He was given command of the 15th Army, with little to do except write a history of the European campaign.

On December 9, 1945, Patton broke his neck in an automobile accident. He was hospitalized at Seventh Army headquarters in Heidelberg while the Army tried to decide where to let him die—Germany or America. He suffered a pulmonary embolism and succumbed on December 21, 1945; he was buried in the United States military cemetery in Hamm, Luxembourg.

The Paris Mint struck a medal in 1946 to honor General George S. Patton. In 1970, for the 25th anniversary of the end of the war, medals honoring Patton were issued by the American Medal Corporation and Presidential Art Medals, Inc. I know of no complete listing of Patton medals.

One of the doctors attending Patton after his accident was Warren Anthony Lapp, who later was a script consultant for the 1986 television movie The Last of Days of Patton, starring George C. Scott (who also starred in the 1970 Academy-Award-winning film Patton).

Lapp was born April 5, 1915, in Chicago Heights, Illinois, son of Reuben Roy Lapp and Gertrude Caroline Hacker Lapp. He received an M.D. from Ohio State University in 1939. Lapp married Emma Katherine Beard on January 25, 1941, and they had two sons.

Lapp served as an Army doctor in Europe from 1944 to 1946, receiving the Bronze Star in April 1945. He delivered the first child born to a military dependent in the European Theater. He practiced in Brooklyn from 1947 to 1970, and served as director of obstetrics and gynecology at St. Johns Episcopal Hospital.

Despite his busy schedule, Lapp found time for numismatics. He was corresponding secretary for the Early American Coppers (EAC) club, and volunteered to publish a newsletter, paying for the first issue himself. From September 15, 1967, to March 15, 1986, he was the editor of Penny-Wise, the EAC's highly respected publication. Along with the first EAC president, Herb Silberman, he edited United States Large Cents, 1793-1857, a collection of articles originally published in The Numismatist.

The April 1971 issue of The Numismatist included Lapp's article "The Yellow Fever Epidemics in Philadelphia and Their Effect on the First U.S. Mint." For this article, Lapp received the ANA's Heath Literary Award.

Warren Lapp died at his home in Charlotte, North Carolina, on May 20, 1993. Patton did not make it to the first anniversary of the end of the war, and Lapp did not survive to the 50th. The ranks of American WWII veterans are thinning. •

Getting Started

THE COMMENTARY THIS month was suggested by a reader who recently became a coin collector and has a brand-new ANA membership number. He asked me a few questions, among them, "How did you get started?"

Well, in 1952 I was a 13-year-old student fascinated with the world around me. My interests were diverse and included reptiles, short-wave radio, rocks and minerals, and astronomy. Having a modest budget, I had to spend wisely—I chose books.

Raymond L. Ditmars' Reptiles of North America was given to me as a gift that year and added to the half dozen volumes I had on the subject. Ditmars, who was curator of reptiles at the New York Zoological Garden (Bronx Zoo), had a way of making just about anything sound interesting. Reading about a box turtle was tantamount to developing an aching desire to own one as a pet!

At an early age, I began accumulating miscellaneous information, not necessarily intentionally, but as a matter of interest. I bought used anthologies of Robert Ripley's "Believe It or Not," finding it fascinating to learn, for instance, that the Lord's Prayer could be written on a grain of rice. My aunt, artist Elsa L. Garratt, shared my interest in obscure things and was very proud of an autographed book Ripley sent her when she contributed information about a huge anchor that was cast in Sweden, but never used. I don't have the citation on hand, but I recall seeing Ripley's sketch of it sitting on dry land looking like a forlorn monument.

My maternal grandfather, Chester L. Garratt (an attorney by profession), was a hobbyist and researcher in many areas. The Book of Daniel in the Bible fascinated him, as did Revelations, and he had bookshelves devoted to these subjects. He also copyrighted a perpetual calendar, of which he was quite proud.

In my grandfather's red-brick, slate-roofed Victorian home in Honesdale, Pennsylvania, I spent several years of my youth, including countless hours in his library. It was Grandpa Garratt who gave me my first "rare" coin—a well-worn 1893 Columbian half dollar. (He also had a cigar from the Columbian Exposition, sealed in an aluminum tube, to be opened and smoked 100 years after the fair. I wonder what happened to it?)

In 1952 I was immersed in the study of rocks and minerals, subscribed to a couple publications on the subject, and owned a few references. Having read of E.S. Dana's standard reference, System of Mineralogy, I took the bus down to the library in nearby Wilkes-Barre to see if it had a set, which it did. However, one had to be 16 years of age even to examine it—apparently it was in a section reserved for adults. Whatever Dana had to say on his chosen subject was lost to me.

Someone told me that Robert L. Rusbar, tax collector for the town of Forty Fort, Pennsylvania, where I lived as a teenager, had a very nice collection of rocks and minerals, so I gave him a call. I was greeted cordially, taken into the office in the basement of his home, and shown box after box of colorful garnets, Herkimer "diamonds," sulfur, miscellaneous crystals, and the like.

After one session with rocks and minerals, Bob asked if I collected coins, to which I replied "no." He brought out a small, green-covered album of Lincoln cents, pointed to one of the first openings, and told me he had paid $10 for that particular coin. He carefully explained that it was a Lincoln cent made in the first year of issue, 1909, with the initials of the designer, Victor David Brenner, on the reverse—but that alone did not make it valuable. With only these features, it would be worth just a few cents. However, beneath the date was a tiny "S," signifying it was made in San Francisco. This letter, or mintmark, jumped the value up to the $10 he had paid.

I felt certain that as soon as I left his office and looked through some pocket change I would find several 1909-S VDB cents. After all, a copy of the Guide Book of United States Coins he showed me revealed that 484,000 were minted. Certainly, in the town of Forty Fort alone there must be hundreds just waiting for me to find!

Bob Rusbar gave me a couple of blue Whitman coin folders and a few mintmarked Lincoln cents to get me started. Inspired by the idea of making money more quickly than I could by cutting grass and performing other mundane chores, I went to the Forty Fort State Bank, traded a $10 bill for 1,000 mixed Lincoln cents, and began looking for 1909-S VDB, 1914-D and 1931-S pieces—the varieties I was told were most valuable. I looked through the 1,000 “pennies,” then another thousand, and another. Soon, my two folders were nearly full—no 1909-S VDB, 1914-D or 1931-S, but most everything else. I started saving extras of the Philadelphia Mint versions of the 1909 VDB, but I accumulated so many that I didn’t want to tie up my capital.

After searching circulating coins for Lincoln cents, I did the same for other series, including Mercury dimes and Standing Liberty quarters. Meanwhile, I sought more knowledge. I decided to take the bull by the horns and write to the Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco Mints to see how many older coins they could supply from their vaults, and to order proofs from each. Back came mimeographed letters from each institution informing me that proofs were made only at Philadelphia and that no back-dated coins were available.

Soon, I discovered Numismatic Scrapbook Magazine, a monthly journal put out by Hewitt brothers in Illinois—it was like finding Ali Baba’s cave! Each month brought dozens of pages filled not only with stories and tales about coins and collecting, but, better yet, dozens of advertisements offering things for sale.

My horizons continued to expand, and George P. Williams, an insurance agent and long-time numismatist from the nearby town of Kingston, took me under his wing, gave me a tour of his beautiful, personal collection, and brought me to monthly meetings of the Wilkes-Barre Coin Club at the YMCA.

He had a lot of coins that were wondrous to my eyes, including album pages filled with date after date of half dollars from 1807 to 1836. What impressive coins they were! I had never seen even one before.

In summary, I started collecting coins the way just about everyone else did back then: by becoming intrigued with Lincoln cents. After that, one thing led to another, although in the early days I never dreamed I would someday catalog such legendary coins as the 1913 Liberty Head nickel, 1894-S dime, 1804 dollar, 1870-S $3 and 1822 half eagle. It’s been a great adventure! •

Working in Mirror Image

IF YOU LOOK closely at the portrait of Secretary of the Treasury Daniel Manning on the 1886 and 1891 $20 silver certificates (H[essler] 818-827), you will notice that his coat is buttoned incorrectly, that is, right over left rather than left over right, the usual manner for men. This detail apparently went unnoticed when Lorenzo J. Hatch created his portrait, because all engravers work in mirror images.

Before engraving begins, the subject is photographically reduced to the actual size intended for the note. With a fine, steel point, the engraver traces the outline and pertinent details of the reduced image onto a piece of cellulose, or similar transparent material, that has been placed over the portrait. The cut outline is filled with a fine-grain, colored powder.

The transparent material then is placed, face down, on a piece of steel that has been treated with a composition called etching ground. The engraver uses a burnisher to transfer the powder lines onto the etching ground. When the cellulose is carefully removed, the outline and details can be seen, in reverse, on the etching ground.

Again using a fine, steel point, the engraver traces the outline through the etching ground into the steel plate. Etching acid is poured into the lines. The etching ground prevents the acid from biting into the untouched portions of the plate. After any necessary additional bitings, the plate is cleaned. The engraver then begins the arduous task of completing the engraving by cutting different types of lines with a variety of instruments.

At different stages, die proofs are "pulled" to see how the engraving is progressing. If an error is found, the entire process must be repeated.

Although the photograph that served as the model for Manning's portrait may have been printed backwards, I think it simply was decided to reverse the portrait to show him facing right. This type of mistake is not common; nevertheless, a few examples have been observed, including G.F.C. Smillie's portrait of Benjamin Harrison on the Third

When Bureau of Engraving and Printing engraver Lorenzo J. Hatch created the portrait of Daniel Manning on this Series 1886 $20 silver certificate, he apparently didn't notice the Treasury Secretary's coat was buttoned right over left. Although mistakes of this type are not common, details such as this sometimes are overlooked because engravers must prepare their work in mirror image.

Charter $5 National Bank note.

In November 1991, a series of eight progressive proofs of the Manning portrait was offered for sale by R.M. Smythe. The notes on which this portrait appears, Series 1886 and Series 1891, are expensive in choice condition. They were printed with 10 different signature combinations. Only 12,000 notes were printed for the rarest—those carrying the signatures of Register of the Treasury William S. Rosecrans and U.S. Treasurer James W. Hyatt. On the other hand, 5,920,000 notes carry the signatures of Register James F. Tillman and Treasurer Daniel N. Morgan.

These were not only the last large-size $20 silver certificates, they also were the last $20 silver certificates, period. No small-size silver certificates were issued in denominations higher than $10. Although a $20 note was prepared as part of Series 1934, it never was issued.

Engraver Hatch, who created Manning's portrait, was born in New England in 1856 and began his apprenticeship with a jeweler in Salem, New York. At age 18, he became the youngest apprentice engraver at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP).

After retiring from the BEP, Hatch engraved for the Western Bank Note Company and the International Bank Note Company. He died in 1914 in Beijing, China, where he and fellow engraver William A. Grant had gone in 1908 to organize a bureau of engraving and printing at the request of the Chinese government.

Portrait of a Studio

THE LARGE, FULL-PANELED, glass French doors open onto a broad deck fronting the entire building. The centuries-old autumnal practice of burning leaves produces a blue haze, distorting the view of the Mediterranean coastline some 30 miles distant. The warmth of the late autumn weather continues, but the days have shortened enough for the leaves to turn and fall. The burning of these precursors of winter sets the pall over the foothills below. The smoke adds to the mystique that has inspired and drawn artists and craftsmen to Grasse, France, since the Middle Ages.

The small city was once an independent republic governed by an elected council. It was not very unlike the coin-issuing Republic of San Marino, after which Grasse patterned its political system and with which the city-state maintained diplomatic relations. Grasse was unable to maintain its independent status past the year 1227. However, most fortunately for numismatists, Grasse claimed a preeminent coin and medal designer among its distinguished artist residents.

Paul Vincze, who died in 1994 at the age of 86, maintained his studio here in the Magagnosc sector of Grasse. It is this studio that we visit to pay homage to one of the best known 20th-century medalists. Vincze designed coins for 17 countries, in addition to hundreds of medallic issues. His studio is a veritable catalog of the varied issues.

Accompanied by his wife, Betty, Paul Vincze was a frequent visitor and familiar figure at American Numismatic Association anniversary conventions. In 1966, at the ANA's 75th anniversary convention, Vincze became the first recipient of the Association's Numismatic Art Award for Excellence in Medallic Sculpture. In 1981 he was invited to design the official medals and badges for the ANA's 90th Anniversary Convention in New Orleans.

He had, a few years earlier, moved his studio from London to Grasse, to the "Villa la Meridienne" on the rue de la Bastide. It was here, in 1992, that Paul completed his last work, a medallic tribute honoring Christopher Columbus on the 500th anniversary of the explorer's landing in the New World. It is impossible not to appreciate the attraction the area must have held for the sculptor.

His studio is maintained as if he merely had taken a trip to one of the many coin conventions he so liked to attend, either as a speaker or a medalist, to meet old friends or to exhibit some of his works. The originals of material collectors saw at conventions or read about in the pages of The Numismatist and other hobby journals cover the studio walls. Bronze plaques, galvanos and plaster casts of most of his works hang in mute testimony to the prominent and famous who posed for him: President Harry S Truman, Queen Elizabeth II, Pope Paul VI, Winston Churchill and Yehudi Menuhin are but a few.

Paul Vincze is better known in Europe for his decade-long series of medals depicting the works of William Shakespeare. The original models also adorn the walls of his studio. Medallic reproductions of these works provide a major fundraising source for the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust at Stratford-upon-Avon in England. All 36 of the bard's plays are represented in medallic art by Paul Vincze.

The studio is filled with tangible memories of Vincze's creations, but his easels stand empty. As the sunlight pours through open doors and we stand where he once did, we begin to understand his choice of location.

Villa la Meridienne sits high above the haze from the burning leaves; but at the moment, it is a different legacy of Grasse's past that now commands our attention. Although smoke settles between the hills of the valley that lies below, a strange but different scent permeates the air. Since the Middle Ages, Grasse has been the cradle of the French perfume industry. It is here that a concentration of industrial plants process the raw materials that go into the manufacture of perfume. Ironically, on this day, it is not the fragrance of Chanel or even Evening in Paris that fills the air, nor is it the smell of fresh flowers like jasmine, tuberose or violets. It is an odor that plays tricks on the mind. We expect the essence in the air to be of flowers, but oddly, this evening it is of blueberries! The perfumeries of Grasse also process the tantalizing aromas of fresh fruits. One may be disappointed to learn that, on occasion when one opens a jar of jam or jelly, the chemically-enhanced aroma smells natural, but may not necessarily be a property of the contents.

Hopefully, the day may come when this studio becomes a study center for numismatists or budding medallic artists, but if this cannot be brought to happen, at least its contents may find their way to a major museum to serve as inspiration for future generations. •

Consumer Alert's Annual Walk on the Bright Side of Numismatics

AS WE NEAR the end of the year, I'd like to take this opportunity to review some of the many pleasant ads I see each month while searching for scams. Contrary to what you may think, I see many more honest, worthwhile ads than the less-than-reputable kind I write about in this column.

It is my tradition to write about only good things during the holiday season. Frankly, it didn't take much searching to find some really neat ads to review this year. Ours is a wonderful hobby, and there still are bargains for all of us to enjoy if we just look for them.

One of your best investments, I always remind you, is your membership in the ANA. Where else can you get so much for your dues' dollars—The Numismatist, free use of books from the ANA Resource Center, educational programs, and a chance to add your voice to the numismatic community?

You don't have to look beyond your own ANA membership to find some of the best values in numismatics. The tangible and intangible are there for your enjoyment, and in your monthly magazine are scores of coins advertised by dealers you can trust for good value and service. These are the firms from which you should be buying your coins.

I am greatly impressed with the announcements of a certain dealer in ancient coins who advertises in The Numismatist. He usually devotes most of a page to telling in detail about a single coin or two he is offering for sale. He always gives an accurate historical account of what he is selling. You get an education just by reading his ads, and you learn about what you are buying and why the pieces are significant.

In addition to providing interesting, authentic and well-attributed coins, this dealer's prices are market oriented. He often buys hoards or quantity lots and is competitive in his dealings. When I mention in this column that ancient coins in some ads are priced at two or three times market value, I usually am comparing them to similar items I find in this dealer's stock.

If you buy coins through mail-bid auction houses, you know the value of their beautiful catalogs. Don't be put off by the nominal fee top auction houses charge for these catalogs. I'm sure they cost more to produce than what is asked. I think they are some of the best bargains in numismatics today.

The research that goes into producing a quality auction catalog is close to that involved in writing an entire book. The expertise and useful information in those catalogs is unavailable elsewhere. The next time you spend an evening perusing one of those auction catalogs, stop for a minute and think about what a bargain you got.

File #447

Are there any good deals to be had in United States coins today? I believe there are—you just have to look for them. To get the best prices, you may have to experiment a bit with different dealers. It is a challenge, but worth the time and effort.

To make this work, you have to remember the basic rules: 1) if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is; and 2) if you don't like the coins you get from a dealer, you can, and should, return them.

Coins I think are super bargains today are uncirculated Buffalo nickels in the $10 price range, Mercury dimes for under $6, Indian Head cents at around $20 and Walking Liberty half dollars at $18. Of course, you won't get gem quality for those prices, but don't settle for anything less than strictly uncirculated pieces.

These obsolete type coins are destined to rise in value when the market gets really hot again. Beginners always need specimens when assembling type sets. I think the Buffalo, Indian Head and Walking Liberty issues have great potential.

If you are interested in these coins, test the market by ordering one or two to check on quality. Talk to the dealer and establish a rapport. If things don't seem quite right, move on to another source. Several dealers specialize in modern coins at competitive prices and regularly advertise in hobby publications. Check them all out.

When are U.S. commemorative coins a bargain? (This is not a trick question.) They can be when you buy them in the secondary market.

Many dealers advertise modern commemorative coins for sale at prices that seem very reasonable when compared to what one would have paid when the coins were first issued. These are legitimate offerings. The pieces come mostly from non-collectors who bought on impulse and later decided to sell, receiving the current market price.

If you collect commemorative issues, you would do well to investigate the secondary market. You will find the coins advertised in numismatic publications. If the pieces still are sealed in original government holders, there is little danger they are damaged or impaired in any way.

They usually are a really good bargain, and a relatively inexpensive way to fill in your collection. The only drawback is you often have to wait several years before the items you want are available. Some collectors consider the wait a fair trade-off for lower prices. A little careful shopping in this area can result in some good buys.

Some dealers go that extra mile to make their customers feel wanted. This is the case with a Milwaukee dealer who provided foil-covered chocolate "coins" as treats for his customers. It paid off better than he ever expected, and I imagine he'll continue the practice.

Last month his store was visited by an armed robber who demanded some rare coins. When asked what he wanted, he pointed to a pile of "gold" pieces that caught his eye. Sure enough, he took the stash of candy coins and made a clean getaway. I wish I had seen his face when he tried to sell the loot. It just goes to show, it pays to know your coins, and all that glitters is not gold.

Enjoy the holidays, and have fun with your hobby. Perhaps some of these tips will help fill your numismatic stocking. I'll be back next month with more on the seamier side of numismatic advertising. •

■ The life of Maynard Sundman, founder of the country's largest "coins on approval" dealership, is illuminated in the new biography, A Decent Boldness: The Life Achievement of Maynard Sundman at Littleton Stamp & Coin Company (ANA Library Cat. No. AA58.S908) by Michael O'Traynor. From his introduction to stamp collecting at age 12, to the building of the philatelic and numismatic empire he commands today, Sundman shares his "true American success story" in the 330 pages of this illustrated, hardcover volume.

Now a vigorous 79 years of age, Sundman is celebrating the 50th anniversary of his New Hampshire company, which he founded in 1945, just weeks after completing four years of service in World War II. The pictures and text offer a comprehensive look at his childhood, high-school years, first forays into the business world, military career and, of course, devotion to the mail-order coin and stamp company he and his wife, Fannie, started from card tables in their home.

Autographed copies of A Decent Boldness: The Life Achievement of Maynard Sundman at Littleton Stamp & Coin Company are available for $25 (hardcover) and $15.95 (softcover) from Littleton Coin Company, Dept. DSX, 646 Union St., Littleton, NH 03561, telephone toll free 800/645-3122.

■ Paper money of the American colonies and original 13 states joins the myriad issues covered in the seventh edition of the Standard Catalog of World Paper Money: Specialized Issues (ANA Library Cat. No. UA33.P5s v.1 1995) written by Albert Pick. The 1,096-page, hard-

Maynard Sundman, who founded the Littleton Stamp and Coin Company (now the Littleton Coin Company) in 1945, is the subject of a recently published biography by Michael O'Traynor. Sundman's company, celebrating its 50th anniversary this year, has become one of the largest mail-order coin businesses in the country.

cover reference complements the second volume of the Standard Catalog of World Paper Money, which covers general issues, and the newly released third volume, which features modern world issues (1960-94).

Covering specialized world paper money of the past 300 years, Volume 1 details regional and military issues, issues of major banks, national pawnshop issues, selected revolutionary emissions and siege notes. More than 17,000 specimens from 365 issuing authorities are listed and valued in up to three grades of preservation. The text is accompanied by more than 8,000 photographs.

As this edition represents the first, new version in three years, it includes many revisions. Among the changes are a major reworking of the listings for Russia and China; updates for listings of proof and specimen notes; and the addition of numerous illustrations. Noted authorities Colin R. Bruce II and Neil Shafer edited the volume, working with an international panel of paper-money experts to compile current, accurate values for all issues.

The Standard Catalog of World Paper Money: Specialized Issues is priced at $60, plus $2.50 shipping, and can be purchased from numismatic book dealers or the publisher, Krause Publications, Book Department NR-POR1, 700 E. State St., Iola, WI 54990-0001, telephone toll free 800/258-0929. The ANA Money-Market also carries this reference. To order, telephone 800/367-9723.

■ The Virginia Numismatic Association has released a one-volume revision of the original two-volume Obsolete Paper Money of Virginia by the late Charlie Affleck. Edited by Richard H. Jones and Keith E. Littlefield, Virginia Obsolete Paper Money (ANA Library Cat. No. US80.V5J6c.2) includes many new listings and catalog numbers in its coverage of all known Virginia notes from 1770 to 1880 (with the exception of Virginia colonial and National Bank notes).

The 470-page reference is divided into sections detailing Virginia Treasury notes, private scrip, city and town notes, county and sheriff notes, and notes from all Virginia banks (including chartered and private institutions). Approximately 2,000 crisp, black-and-white illustrations enrich the text, and an informative foreword by Douglas B. Ball lays the groundwork for the history behind the notes.

Virginia Obsolete Paper Money is available in hardcover and unbound (plain or holed for a three-ring binder) versions for $55 and $49, respectively. A 40-percent dealer discount is offered for orders of three or more. To order, contact the Virginia Numismatic Association, Attn.: Keith Littlefield, 3902 Rose Ln., Annandale, VA 22003, telephone 703/354-9544.

■ Novice and experienced collectors alike will find the answers to all their questions—from the routine to the ridiculous—in Alan Herbert's Coin Clinic: 1,001 Frequently Asked Questions (ANA Library Cat. No. GA90.H4c). What is the most counterfeited United States coin? Why will a magnet attract a Canadian but not a U.S. nickel? What is a "Black Beauty" 5-cent piece? Herbert addresses these and hundreds of other queries in the 224-page, softcover book recently released by Krause Publications.

Based on Herbert's "Coin Clinic" column, a regular feature in Numismatic News and Coins magazine, Coin Clinic takes on questions posed to the author by collectors, dealers, scholars, writers, columnists and specialists since he took over the column in mid-1981. Of the 13,000 questions he has received since then, Herbert chose 1,001 for the book. Topics range from altered coins, appraisals and denominations to mintages, nonlegal-tender coins and proofs.

Black-and-white photographs help readers visualize the subject matter at hand, and an index and list of resources guide the curious to further information. Coin Clinic: 1,001 Frequently Asked Questions measures 6 x 9 inches and is priced at $9.95 (plus $2.50 for shipping). Wisconsin residents should add 5.5-percent sales tax. Place orders through Krause Publications, Book Department PTR1, 700 E. State St., Iola, WI 54990-0001, telephone toll free 800/258-0929; or the ANA Money-Market, telephone 800/367-9723. • contributed to the early demise of this die. The "irregular date" obverse then was teamed with the third reverse die, which briefly was used with the "close date" obverse. This is the last and most common variety of 1799 eagle with small obverse stars, having twice as many survivors as the other seven varieties combined.

Bass was the first to determine the "X" obverse variety's important number-one position in the die-use sequence of 1799-dated eagles. Indeed, the 1799 "X-A" eagle with small obverse stars represents the first use of the design that became the standard for all subsequent gold eagles. In his Complete Encyclopedia of

The last and most abundant 1799 eagle with small obverse stars pairs an "irregular date" obverse with a "B" reverse, which previously was used with the "close date" obverse.

U.S. and Colonial Coins (p. 547), Breen describes the two wide-date 1799 varieties as "Ex. rare. Breen 1-A and new obv." In fact, all 1799 eagles with small obverse stars are rare, with the exception of Breen's "3-C" and "4-B" varieties.

Currently, only two specimens of Bass' "X-A" variety are known to exist. One appeared as Lot 5817 in the 1994 ANA sale conducted by Heritage Numismatic Auctions, where, like the coin in the Merkin sale, it was incorrectly identified as "Breen 1-A." (Therefore, the first variety of 1799 eagle is far more rare than the fabled 1795 eagle with nine-leaf palm branch on the reverse; about 10 specimens of the latter are known, but approximately 300 other eagles exist with the same date.)

Information gleaned from the study of die varieties of U.S. gold coinage is important to our understanding of early minting techniques. Since the $10 gold pieces were struck with relatively few dies, it is much easier to analyze die-use sequence and die deterioration. (A comprehensive description of the eight varieties, as well as the other 24 varieties of Capped Bust eagles, has been compiled by the author and appears in Volume 9, Issue 1 (1994) of the John Reich Journal.) The nine dies used to strike the eight varieties of 1799 Capped Bust eagles with small obverse stars constitute the most complex sequence of dies for any gold eagles produced from 1795 to 1804, providing a rich opportunity to explore the workings of the United States Mint in its first decade of operation.

Club Activities

The ANA welcomes its newest member club, the Asociación Numismática De Guatemala, 12 C.4-53 Z.1 (E. Herrera Loc. SF), Guatemala.

In September those attending the Northern Valley Coin Club meeting in New Jersey learned about "Numismatic Writing and You" from guest speaker David Alexander, noted researcher for Stack's and columnist for Coin World. In October the group headed out in search of educational riches as it toured the gold vaults of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York . . .

Members of California's Fremont Coin Club (FCC) worked hard to make their recently concluded, annual show a big success, and they were rewarded for their efforts. The September issue of the club's newsletter, The Double Eagle, reports that dealers who attended the show praised FCC members for their efforts to assist them. Specifically, dealers said they were impressed by the fact that members were present when they arrived, went out of their way to help, and were still around when they packed to leave at the end of the day. The club's junior numismatists received special recognition for their "cheerful smiles" and "youthful exuberance" . . .

The October 5 meeting of the Gateway Coin Club of Merced County in California really took the cake. The group held a bake-off in which the judges awarded prizes for the baked goods with the most original design, best design execution and best taste. The only catch: each entry (cake, cupcake, cookie, etc.) had to be shaped or decorated to resemble something numismatic. All entries then became the property of the club and were consumed as the evening's refreshments . . .

California's Vallejo Numismatic Society celebrated its 500th consecutive meeting in October with a banquet, complete with limited-issue table favors, an all-gold drawing, and special displays illustrating the Society's history. In keeping with tradition, the keynote speaker and guest of honor for the evening was Past ANA President Edward Rochette (who was the featured speaker at the group's 400th meeting in July 1987) . . .

The membership of the Western Pennsylvania Numismatic Society (WPNS) is looking forward to the coming year, as the club's full schedule of speakers has been set. Among those slated to share their knowledge are Wayne Homren, who will present "Numismatics in the News" in January, and Rodger Hershey, whose talk, titled "Stuff," is on the calendar for May. Other numismatists who have agreed to speak at 1996 WPNS meetings include John Burns, Corleen Chesonis, Richard Crosby, Skip Culleton and Tom Fort . . .

In a recent issue of "NOW News," the official publication of the Numismatists of Wisconsin, a short news item appeared about Miracle, the white buffalo calf born in Janesville, Wisconsin, in 1994. Miracle's birth was an extremely important event for Native Americans, as a white buffalo calf symbolizes a great rebirth for their nation and harmony for the entire world. According to the report, the American Bison Association says the odds of a white buffalo birth are one in millions.

Dan Scheid, second vice president of the Dedicated Wooden Money Collectors, has issued a wooden nickel to commemorate Miracle's birth. Printed in red ink, the obverse of the piece carries the legend: THE WHITE BUFFALO MIRACLE / JANESVILLE, WIS. / AUG. 20, 1994 / GOOD FOR / MOMENTS OF HOPE. The reverse features the standard, wooden-nickel Buffalo design. To order this special piece for 35 cents (or three for $1), send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dan Scheid, 5214 N. Autumn Ln., McFarland, WI 53558-9664 . . .

The Philadelphia Coin Club issued a wooden dollar to mark its 60th anniversary, celebrated in October with a special "open house" meeting. The commemorative, featuring a medieval minter striking coins, is available (two for $1, plus a self-addressed, stamped envelope) from Henry Harbage, 231 Haverford Rd., Wynnewood, PA 19096-3318.

During the anniversary event, Charles Hoskins, head of the International Numismatic Society's authentication service, and well-known error specialist Lou Pearlman, presented a program titled "A Closer Look at Coins and Collecting," which they augmented with binocular microscopes. Attendees were encouraged to bring their own coins for examination. Invitational exhibits mounted for the evening included coins from sunken treasure ships; early United States gold type coins; scarce, early U.S. currency; and coins of the ancient world.

Specific Gravity Simplified

IN MY AUGUST column ("Metal Content and Plating," p. 1036), I offered to send a written description of how to measure specific gravity to anyone who requested it. Response has been far greater than I expected, which makes me think a few others who haven't been near a mailbox lately still may be scratching their heads. So, I've devoted this month's column to measuring specific gravity.

Specific gravity is the ratio of the weight (or, more correctly, mass) of a given volume of a substance to that of an equal volume of another substance (for solids, this is water), and most commonly is expressed in grams per milliliter (or grams per cubic centimeter). For example, if a cube of pure (elemental) gold has a length of 1 centimeter, width of 1 centimeter and height of 1 centimeter, it will weigh 19.3 grams. A cube with the same measurements, but made of silver, would weigh 10.5 grams; and a cube of aluminum, 2.7 grams. To the numismatist, this measurement is invaluable when determining the composition of a coin or medal.

How do you measure specific gravity? All you need to get started are a few, simple measurements and a calculator. There are many approaches to this procedure, and many kinds of equipment can be used. The method I'm going to describe here is one with which I became familiar in my work for the American Numismatic Association Certification Service; it easily can be modified for different types of equipment. Other variations are described in college-level chemistry lab guides and textbooks, which can be found in many libraries.

First, weigh the piece in question and record its weight in grams. The balance (or scale) you use should be accurate to at least two (preferably three) decimal places. Now comes the tricky part: you must determine the weight of the piece while it is immersed in water. You might have to vary the procedure depending on your equipment, but the principle will be similar. The method I use is based on the balance I worked with at the ANA (a highly accurate and precise instrument that weighs coins to $1/10,000$ gram).

You will need a small cup of distilled water and a platform on which it can be placed over the balance. (Make sure that neither the cup nor the platform actually touches the balance.) You'll also need to secure to the balance a wire apparatus that, while touching neither the cup nor the platform, can be used to suspend the coin in the cup of water. (A carefully bent coat hanger works fine for this, and a bent paper clip can be used to suspend the coin from the hanger.)

Once the apparatus is set up, "zero" the balance so it does not weigh the hanger or paper clip (this is accomplished on electronic balances simply by pushing a lever). Or, if you know what the hanger and paper clip weigh, you can subtract their weight from the measurement you are about to make.

Make sure the coin is completely immersed in the water, and be careful not to scratch it on any of the bent wires. When performed properly, this procedure will give you the weight of the coin while it is immersed. Having these two measurements (the "dry" weight and "wet" weight), you are ready to calculate the coin's specific gravity.

For demonstration purposes, let's use a 1964 half dollar that weighs 12.50 grams. Using the above procedure, you discover that its wet weight is 11.29 grams. To figure the weight and volume of the water

The specific gravity of a coin can be measured without the aid of sophisticated equipment. A variety of ordinary items, such as coin boxes, plastic cups, wire hangers and paper clips, can be combined with a digital scale to create the needed apparatus.

Sensitive balances (like the one shown) are highly accurate and precise instruments. Many high-school and college chemistry laboratories utilize such equipment.

displaced (because the specific gravity of water at room temperature is 1 gram per milliliter or cubic centimeter), first subtract the wet weight from the dry weight ($12.50\text{g} - 11.29\text{g} = 1.21\text{g}$). If you know what the water weighs, you also know its volume. (The volume of water displaced is the volume of the immersed object.)

Next, divide the dry weight by the volume ($12.50\text{g} \div 1.21\text{ml} = 10.33\text{g}$). The specific gravity of our 1964 half dollar is 10.33g (more or less what you would expect for a 90-percent silver, 10-percent copper coin).

With smaller coins, I recommend performing the entire procedure several times for the sake of accuracy. Naturally, you should be careful when drying the coins (pat gently with a soft towel or allow them to air dry). Also, be doubly careful of any coins you suspect contain a large percentage of copper—on occasion, they have been known to change color during this process. If you're not completely comfortable with the procedure, I recommend familiarizing yourself with it by practicing on low-value coins. If you'd rather leave such determinations to the experts, consider sending your coin(s) to the American Numismatic Association's Authentication Bureau for evaluation.

For an additional discussion of specific gravity, see the September 1992 installment of J.P. Martin's "ANA Authentication Bureau" column ("Conducting Your Own Specific Gravity Tests," p. 1322). •

A Genuine 1884-O Morgan Dollar Struck in Copper

In February 1993, the ANA Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) received from Coin World Editor Beth Deisher what appeared to be an 1884-O dollar struck in copper. She asked ANAAB to analyze the coin and offer an opinion as to its authenticity and manufacture.

We found the coin's devices to be of Mint quality. Some peripheral legends show evidence of bifurcation (indicative of striking weakness) at 12 and 5 o'clock on the obverse and 1 and 6 o'clock on the reverse, likely the result of a non-uniform planchet. Overall, detail is sharp at the center and weaker at the perimeter, with evidence of "ejection damage" at the stars and other devices (indicating machine striking).

Several parallel, diagonal planchet defects are apparent on both obverse and reverse; this characteristic is consistent with the rolled strip metal from which planchets are cut. The specimen displays a dark-brown to red patina and could be 35 to 111 years old.

Miscellaneous scratches on the coin's surface suggest wear; in the past it might have been someone's pocket piece. ANAAB grades the coin Choice Extremely Fine-45 to About Uncirculated-50.

The rims are raised from the field, but not flat and squared off, as is typical for this issue. A suspicious seam-like effect is evident on the outer edge, suggesting an electrototype copy. However, specific gravity tests proved consistent with copper, and the piece exhibits good tonal quality when struck.

The edge is slightly concave, which is not typical of normal coins, but might be related to striking and planchet thickness. We counted 181 reeds, which is consistent with coins struck by the New Orleans Mint. Considering the age of this piece and the lower level of sophistication of counterfeits produced in the 1950s or earlier, the chances of it being a fake, down to the exact reed count, are minimal.

X-ray analysis of the coin revealed a copper content of 98.91 percent;

tin, .06 percent; and zinc, 1.03 percent. The rotational axis is 180°.

In summary, the appearance of the surface is that of an aged and patinated copper coin. It is not likely to have been produced within the last 35 years. Nearly all struck counterfeits produced prior to 1960 were made using methods less sophisticated than those necessary to produce a counterfeit of this quality. Ejection damage and tonal qualities suggest a struck piece. All evidence points to an 1884-O dollar that was struck in copper at New Orleans on a non-standard planchet using Mint machinery.

Why this coin was produced is subject to speculation. The coin's specifications and appearance seem to suggest an unofficial striking. •

AUCTION INSIGHTS
BY BOB MERRILL

Real Men Never Ask for Directions

I spend a fair percentage of my job traveling to meet with prospective consignors. When I know I'm going to be on the road, I always get specific directions to the meeting location. Some say the older you are, the earlier you wake up in the morning. Maybe that's why I'm always early for these meetings. But, once I was right on time because I got lost on the way.

Whenever we conduct an ANA auction, we receive many consignments from the metropolitan area in which the sale is held. Such was the case in Cincinnati in 1988. I had been in one of those beautiful Finger Lakes villages in Cayuga County, New York, and was to fly to Cincinnati from Syracuse. (I specifically remember being in that area of New York State because in my conversation with a consignor, I said something like, "Isn't this where Millard Fillmore is from?" He replied, "Don't believe I know the fellow." Served me right for ending an interrogative sentence with a preposition.)

Arriving in Cincinnati, I made plans to get an early start the next morning so I would have time to find the address. Although the meeting was not until 9 a.m., I found the correct street slightly after 8 o'clock. The name of the street escapes me now, but the house number was 1802. As I continued eastward, I assumed I was getting close. Trouble was, the neighborhood was deteriorating faster than the street numbers were climbing. I passed pawn shops, guns and ammo places, a hubcap store and a tattoo parlor—just the sort of neighborhood in which you'd expect to find someone with a BU set of Barber dimes, right?

Once I crossed the freeway, things improved slightly, and I found the address. Parking in front of an old, two-story house that was crying for paint, I reminded myself to defer all judgments until I saw the coins.

Since the doorbell didn't work, I politely knocked and waited . . . then I knocked a little louder and waited some more. After a moment or two, I knocked even louder, wondering if they had forgotten our meeting. (Then again, I was 20 minutes early.) On the fourth knock (which fortunately didn't incur the wrath of any of the neighbors), I began to hear sounds from behind the door. The lady who greeted me wore a strapless dress over an undergarment that wasn't (strapless, that is).

I must have mumbled my name, for after inviting me in, she retreated into another room, saying, "Ricky, Harold is here for you." Before I had a chance to decide if I even wanted to be Harold, she came back and said her husband would be out in a minute. Just as she was saying she hadn't seen me in a long time, Ricky popped in. "Myrtie, this isn't Harold," he said. "Harold is bald; this guy has a toupee."

I was beside myself with a combination of laughter and embarrassment. You guessed it: the address I wanted was 1802 West, not East! Quickly checking my valuable Timex clock, I realized I had 15 minutes to drive 36 blocks. I bid adieu to Ricky and Myrtie and proceeded west in my nondescript rent-a-car. I arrived on time at the correct destination. And during the drive, I kept thinking that when it's time for me to get a toupee, I better buy it from Amway so it looks better than what I've got now. •

Tax-Deductible Donations Expand the Cabinet

The ANA Museum has been greatly improved by the generosity of its benefactors. Each month I feature recent acquisitions of interesting numismatic items and will continue to do so. Consider becoming a Museum supporter, and give me the welcome opportunity to highlight your contribution!

Still relatively young, the ANA Museum's collection is deficient in many major categories. For examples of subject areas in which the ANA collection is less than adequate, contact the ANA Museum, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279; telephone 719/632-2646; fax 719/634-4085; Internet anamus@money.org.

The ANA is a tax-exempt organization as defined under section 501(c)3 of the Internal Revenue Code. Therefore, all donations to the Association qualify as charitable contributions. The Museum is not a tax-consulting service; for additional information about potential tax benefits of donations, refer to relevant Internal Revenue Service (IRS) literature or a tax advisor.

Although the ANA can accept worthwhile donations beyond those items sought for addition to the Museum or Resource Center, donors should bear in mind that some material may have to be disposed of in order for the ANA to derive appropriate benefit. Such donations may be considered by the IRS to be "unrelated" to the Association's established purpose and thus would not entitle donors to the same degree of "appreciated value" deduction as would otherwise be the case. Prospective contributors should consult their tax advisors or the IRS.

The ANA also encourages those collectors who do not wish to donate their collections to the Museum during their lifetime to seriously consider the advantages of bequeathing them to the Association. Please consult your lawyer as to the best methods for considering the ANA Museum in your will. All potential donors should have their collections evaluated by an independent, qualified appraiser, as defined by the IRS. • including Iranian civic coinage of the 19th-century and the issues of the 20th-century Pahlavis.

Other feline figures appear in the Artuqid series, such as the leopard on the dirhem of Nasir al-Din Artuq Arslan, which depicts a rider sitting sidesaddle on the big cat. This piece was issued by the Mardin mint in 1220. As Spengler and Sayles point out, a traditional iconography of Dionysos shows him riding a leopard. The dots in the field substitute for stars, a representation that can be traced to ancient Mesopotamia, when the constellation Pleiades (an astrological sign to the Mesopotamians) was represented as a linear pattern of seven dots (from about 500 B.C.). The dots always were closely associated with the solar disk and crescent, which became major symbols of the Sasanian kings (as can be seen in the portraits on the silver dirhems of Kavad I and other rulers)—and so the circle closes on itself.

The figural representations on Turkoman bronze coins clearly do not violate traditional proscriptions; rather, they illustrate a fusion of the Islamic astrological and Sasanian symbolic traditions. Indeed, it is tempting to suggest that the simplest explanation for the figural motifs on Islamic coins is that they were the seals of the issuers and, as such, belong in the province of private—not public—art.

Grading is the Language of Numismatics — Speak the Language

Announcing a great new video

GRADING OF MINT STATE U.S. COINS

If you can't personally attend one of the ANA's Grading seminars this informative new video is the best way to sharpen your grading skills. "I was delighted to see that it addressed every single area which I feel is important, in fact, crucial, to understand today's grading standards. The difference between market grading (the real world) and technical grading (the more theoretical approach), were covered in depth and especially well explained. I very strongly endorse this presentation, and suggest that anyone can benefit from it . . . beginner or seasoned collector. It is concise, with excellent illustrations, and very much 'user-friendly.' The $39.95 price is a bargain for this 88 minute seminar, as it could easily pay for itself through the purchase (or non-purchase) of one coin."—Bill Fivaz

You will learn:

- History and evolution of grading
- Technical versus market grading
- Four factors of eye appeal
- The types of luster
- Whizzing, cleaning, thumbing and artificial frosting

The video even gives you the opportunity to grade coins pictured on the screen—with immediate feedback from the instructor.

"This script is the best discussion of commercial grading I have ever seen."

—Ken Bressett, editor of the authoritative Official ANA Grading Standards for U.S. Coins.

If you are serious about improving your grading skills this may be the best $39.95 you ever spent.

FROM COLLECTOR TO INVESTOR

The most trusted grading service available

For many of today's numismatists coin collecting started at a young age with the discovery of a few 'old' nickles or pennies.

As we grew older the excitement of finding, trading and collecting coins stayed with us.

Eventually, the hobby became a business and the business grew into an industry.

At NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA (NGC), we are committed to advancing numismatics—both as a hobby and as a business.

THE CREDIBLE SOURCE FOR SUPERIOR, CONSISTENT COIN GRADING SERVICES.

Now dealers, collectors, and investors can be confident that they will receive consistent coin grading time after time.

The NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, with over 500 charter and associate members, provides the industry with an independent, credible, and superior coin grading service.

The Hobby Is Loaded with Heavyweights

SEVERAL YEARS AGO, while waiting for a flight at St. Louis' Lambert Field, my wife, Mary Ann, and I played the game, "Pick Out the Coin Dealer." The rules were simple—identify those among the crowd who appeared to be professional numismatists.

At the time, Mary Ann was new to the hobby; recognizing faces was not a factor. Surprisingly, she identified a fair number from the trade. While she did not need to say, "Elementary, my dear Ed," her powers of observation served her well.

Clues were several. Even by mid-summer, few dealers boast a suntan—too many daytime hours and fine-weather weekends committed to a bourse table. The use of salesmen's sample cases to cart show inventory through the airport concourse is a rather obvious detail, but the burden of carry-on baggage was not the only signal. Pounds around the waist was an identifying factor, as well.

The hobby is loaded with heavyweights. This observation is not meant to be derogatory. It is meant as an expression of concern. We all know a number of dealers who fit this profile. Poor diet, as well as stress and lack of exercise, are occupational hazards, but none is absolute. Our editors have had to prepare far too many obituary notices of untimely passings.

While we ponder membership benefits, we ignore those who help to make the hobby possible—those who spend their time, energy and resources to satisfy our quests. Who sets the bourse hours, the long, demanding days at convention? These are our responsibilities as convention planners. Rigorous schedules take their toll.

Are there things we can do, short of shortening the days? We find ourselves providing young numismatists to serve as pages, but forcing dealers to eat concessionaires' food—calorie-laden hot dogs and fat-globuled hamburgers. We could start by demanding that convention center concessionaires provide better-balanced menus. The rule would be simple—no variety, no open.

Just as important, we need to be more considerate of dealers. With an average bourse day of 8 to 10 hours, professionals often feel forced to sit passively behind their tables. There is little, if any, chance for exercise. Collectors, dealers fear, are apt to complain about an unmanned table no matter how briefly vacated. Security at empty tables also poses problems. Perhaps we should consider bonded assistants who, with the dealers' approval, could spell them during their leave, or allow friends or relatives to temporarily assist.

Over the years, the ANA has offered a number of courses of benefit to dealers—coin grading and counterfeit detection come readily to mind—but these have been directed at wealth, not health. The latter is a subject too long ignored.

This past summer our week-long conference on the campus of The Colorado College boasted the largest enrollment ever—153 numismatists. Credit in part must go to reduced tuition costs and the summer airfare war. A new and varied selection of courses played its part, too.

What would you say, Mr., Mrs. or Ms. Bourse Dealer, if the ANA were to offer a course designed strictly with you in mind—a course that focuses on convention diet and exercise, on health instead of wealth? The course could be part of an overall conference schedule offering other subjects as well.

These classes would offer more than just the opportunity to shed a few pounds, more than a tale of weight. It might just be your life that we are offering. The ANA would rather have you as a member for a long time than as a negative statistic.

Give us your opinion. We will direct your comments to our Summer Conference coordinator.

For dealers who must spend long, demanding days behind their bourse tables, poor diet, as well as stress and lack of exercise, are occupational hazards.

U.S. Commemorative Coinage Programs

"... those Washington bureaucrats are exploiting collectors like me for their pet projects."

—Brian Heikkila
Collector

"The ultimate power . . . always rests with purchasers."

—Admiral Paul A. Yost, President
James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation

I WAS, UNTIL now, a rather devoted collector of the commemorative dollars produced by the Mint in the last few years. For the most part, the designs were good, the prices somewhat reasonable, and the causes for the surcharges deserving. But after I read the August 1992 issue of Coins magazine, I realized how those Washington bureaucrats are exploiting collectors like me for their pet projects.

According to several news items appearing in the magazine, there will be two more commemorative issues this year in addition to the Olympic coins—one for the controversial 500th anniversary of Columbus' arrival in the New World, and another to commemorate the bicentennial of the White House.

The surcharges on the Columbus issue will help establish a Christopher Columbus Fellowship Foundation, the aim of which is to finance new discoveries. As for the White House commemorative dollar, I have no idea what program will get those surcharges.

Also, a bill has been introduced for a 1992 commemorative coin to celebrate the "Year of the Vietnam Veteran," with a $7 surcharge going to the Vietnam Veterans' Assistance Fund (VVAFA). I am not at all against the VVAFA, but I don't think it should be financed through coin sales.

Other proposed coinage that has been signed into law is a 1993 three-piece set honoring James Madison and the Bill of Rights. The slightly reduced surcharges of $30, $6 and $3 will be used to fund "fellowships in Constitutional law for high-school teachers." Now, if I remember right, wasn't that how the surcharges for the 1987 bicentennial of the Constitution coins were to be used?

And that is not all. Also proposed for 1993 is a three-coin set intended to finance a Civil War Battlefield Foundation. In 1994 there will be a commemorative issue honoring the World Cup soccer games.

The U.S. Mint's commemorative coinage program is becoming less and less attractive to collectors like me because it makes us feel exploited and used. I strongly urge collectors to write to their congresspersons about this inappropriate manipulation of our beloved hobby. •

COLLECTING U.S. COINS is fun, and it's an interesting hobby.

When Congress or the Mint make inappropriate decisions regarding coin programs, the collecting community is correct in criticizing them. But such criticism should take into account the national good, as well as the good of the hobby.

Several points about commemorative coins should be borne in mind by the collecting community:

Commemorative coin legislation. Simply because a commemorative coin program is proposed in Congress does not necessarily mean that it will become law. The fact is, many proposed coinage programs are never enacted.

Surcharges. No private group or member of Congress has ever gained financially from modern coin surcharges, which are authorized to aid federal programs and national sporting events or to reduce the national debt. For example, the White House coin surcharges will be used to maintain the public rooms of the White House, while surcharges for the James Madison/Bill of Rights coins will be used to improve high school teachers' knowledge of the Constitution. (Surcharges on the Constitution coins reduced the national debt.)

Mintage. Perhaps the most distressing aspect of modern commemorative issues is the high mintage. Well-intentioned members of Congress propose high mintage levels to assure that every person desiring to purchase a coin has the opportunity. However, these levels have often exceeded the coin market's demand.

Future coin programs. With a mintage level of only 500,000, the White House coin recently sold out in just three weeks. The 1993 James Madison/Bill of Rights coins have the lowest mintage limits of any modern three-coin set authorized by Congress. Lower mintages create sellout programs and revitalize the secondary market.

When criticism is constructive, collectors help Congress and the Mint make correct decisions. The ultimate power to decide which program is worthy of support always rests with purchasers. For the sake of the hobby, let's make sure that criticism of commemorative coins is factual and fair. Let's not return to the days when commemorative coins were not minted at all. •

Korver Unravels the Mysteries of Coin Storage

After reading R. Bruce Korver's latest article, "To Have and To Hold," appearing in the June 1992 issue of The Numismatist (p. 759), I felt compelled to offer my compliments. Nearly every collector (and dealer) has wrestled at some point with the best way to store and display his collection.

Bob humorously pointed out many of the problems and solutions the coin business has dealt with over the decades. Mostly I am impressed with Bob's ability to turn a phrase, whether he is writing colloquially or in one of his more scholarly monographs.

Bruce Lorch, ANA 71092

Readers Comment on Rarity Scale

Dave Bowers' recent "Coins and Collectors" column on rarity ratings ("Proposal for a Universal Rarity Scale," June 1992, p. 790) was a wonderfully subtle piece of tongue-in-cheek writing.

At first, the column seems like an interesting research article on the history of rarity scales. Then, when Dave proposed his Universal Rarity Scale (URS) with "R" numbers from 1 to infinity, I finally got the joke. Who is going to count millions of coins in order to assign an issue a URS rating?

Then, when Dave wrote, "In fact, not a single Morgan dollar issue would be even R-4 on the Sheldon Scale," I knew that the joke was on me for not tumbling to the humor sooner. Fancy someone calling a mint-state 1879-CC dollar "rare" because only 10,000 specimens exist!

Michael Hodder, ANA 104582

I read with interest Q. David Bowers' article "Proposal for a Universal Rarity Scale" and appreciate his concern for establishing a uniform system. However, I found his proposed scale cumbersome and the numbers unfriendly.

Since we are accustomed to thinking in powers of 10 rather than in terms of exponents of 2, I feel that a scale utilizing numbers rounded to 10s would be more intuitive. As Mr. Bowers proposed, a scheme should probably relate decreasing coin rarity to exponential increases in population.

I believe a common logarithmic scale as shown below satisfies both of these conditions:

RARITY LEVEL	POPULATION	LOGARITHM LIMIT
R-1	1 known	0.0
R-2	2-3	0.5
R-3	4-10	1.0
R-4	11-30	1.5
R-5	31-100	2.0
R-6	101-300	2.5
R-7	301-1,000	3.0
R-8	1,001-3,000	3.5
R-9	3,001-10,000	4.0
R-10	10,001-30,000	4.5
... etc.

The logarithmic steps provide a mathematically useful progression. The range sizes increase at an accelerating rate, while just two steps of rarity represent each power of 10. The numbers are easy to recall, and for descriptions of most coin series, probably no more than 15 steps need be used. Even greater mathematical meaning can be conveyed by using the logarithm values as rarity levels. (For example, R-2 means a maximum of 100 coins are known.)

If greater precision is necessary, such as Mr. Bowers' example of discriminating rare coins having populations of 5 and 10 specimens, the scale could be divided into narrower intervals:

R-1	1 known	0.0
R-2	2-3	0.5
R-3	4-5	0.7
R-4	6-10	1.0
R-5	11-20	1.3
R-6	21-50	1.7
R-7	51-100	2.0
R-8	101-200	2.3
R-9	201-500	2.7
R-10	501-1,000	3.0
... etc.

This scheme produces nearly 30-percent more levels than the prior scale. I look forward to the time when such a system is widely used to uniformly categorize and describe coin populations.

John T. Reynolds, ANA 156457

I am writing in response to Q. David Bowers' "Proposal for a Universal Rarity Scale." I agree with his idea, except for one minor detail: I believe it would easier to use and memorize if it was based directly on the binary system. This modification would require only one minor change—subtract 1 from each of Mr. Bowers' rarity numbers.

The resulting scale would proceed as such:

Rarity 0 (R-0)	= 1 known, unique
R-1	= 2 known
R-2	= 3 to 4 known
R-3	= 5 to 8 known
R-4	= 9 to 16 known
R-5	= 17 to 32 known
R-6	= 33 to 64 known
R-7	= 65 to 128 known
R-8	= 129 to 256 known
R-9	= 257 to 512 known
R-10	= 513 to 1,204 known
... and so on

Granted, this modified system may not be of much help to the collector of coins for which thousands of specimens are known, but to the collector of rare coins who is familiar with the binary system, this scale would be much easier to use.

South Africa Embarks on a New Age of Numismatics

George Williamson's interesting article on "The Republic of South Africa and Its Coins" in the February issue of The Numismatist (p. 195) contains one item that may be confusing to collectors.

With the introduction of the new coin series, a 5-rand coin has been proposed, but not yet produced for circulation or for collectors' mint and proof sets. It is unknown when it will be released, but estimates are sometime in 1993-94.

Of interest to collectors, as well, is that the silver 1 rand did not cease in 1982, but is still produced for proof sets and as individual commemoratives. Recent nickel, silver and gold commemoratives include the 100th anniversary of Johannesburg (1986), "Year of the Disabled" (1986), Dias Bartolomeu (1988), "Huguenots" (1988), "The Great Trek" (1988) and "100 Years of Nursing" (1991).

With current changes in South Africa's coin series and a new bank note series being gradually introduced at the end of 1992, South African numismatics is having an interesting period.

Cliff Van Rensburg, ANA 111747

Who's Fooling Who?

I have read with much interest the recent comments in the January, March and April issues of The Numismatist

(pp. 89, 322, 447 and 529) on the Hutt River Province issues. I should like to add an additional dimension to this confusing situation in the hope of clarifying one aspect that may be of importance to collectors of these "coins."

I made several inquiries a few years ago regarding the issue of silver 1-ounce "koala" pieces from the New Queensland Mint. At the time, there was considerable concern in Australia about this issue, with GoldCorp Australia (which produces Australia's bullion issues) seeking through the courts to have the sale of the silver koala stopped. It was thought that there could be confusion between the silver koala and legitimate Australian bullion issues (i.e., the platinum Koalas) that are keenly sought by collectors and fetch a premium over their intrinsic value.

More importantly, and the point that has concerned me, is that the silver koala, like the Hutt River Province issues, is the product of the New Queensland Mint. Commenting on the silver koala, the August 1989 issue of Australian Coin Review stated, "Just where these coins are being made remains a mystery; the whereabouts of the 'New Queensland Mint' continues to elude the hordes of northern numismatists trying to seek it out."

Queensland is a northern Australian state that has never had a mint that produced legal-tender coinage for Australia. The New Queensland Mint should therefore not be confused with any Australian Mint, such as the Perth Mint or the Royal Australian Mint, which produce Australia's bullion and circulating coinage.

As an Australian citizen, I do not have a problem with a wheat-farming family in Western Australia trying to make a few dollars by selling these pieces. But I think it is fair to warn collectors that these are not Australian issues; they certainly are not legal tender outside the wheat farm that is the Hutt River Province, nor are they minted in Queensland or anywhere else in Australia.

Perhaps the clearest statement on these items comes from the April issue of the "News Bulletin" of the Queensland branch of the Australian Numismatic Society. The Australian Embassy's statement in the January issue of The Numismatist ("Consumer Alert," p. 89) notes that "the 'coins' . . . are not legal tender in Australia, . . . the Hutt River Province is a private farming property in Australia, and has no other status." Which, of course, is what we [in Australia] already knew.

K. Michael Pollard, ANA 139646

The concern about Hutt River Province coins is not so much what the definition of a legal-tender coin is, but whether people buying them are being duped. "Disney Dollars" probably have a greater claim to being legal tender than Hutt River coins because more people use Disney Dollars and there is more to buy with them. But Disneyland does not claim to be a sovereign nation.

I'm not sure how much the sovereignty of a nation matters to numismatists, but I question the Hutt River Province's claim to having seceded. For example, does Prince Leonard pay property or income tax to Australian authorities? For that matter, can a citizen of the Hutt River Province be compelled to pay taxes to Prince Leonard? If a citizen refused, what kind of punishment could the Hutt River government impose? If the Hutt River Province jailed someone, would the Australian authorities consider that kidnapping or hostage-taking? If the Province merely sends its wrongdoers into exile, it suggests that the government of the Hutt River Province has no sovereign authority to maintain civil order.

U.S. Customs might have classified the coins as legal tender, but has anyone ever entered the U.S. on a Hutt River Province passport? With respect to its "Desert Storm" commemorative, did the Province send any troops to that conflict? Is the country so lacking in history that it must commemorate other countries' history?

The place just doesn't seem to have the status of the Isle of Man, or Pitcairn Islands, or even San Marino.

Treasure-Seeking Phips Plundered Nova Scotia

I read Thomas H. Sebring's article on the salvage of the Nuestra Señora de la Concepción with much interest ("The Silver Shoals Treasure and the Men Who Found It," May 1992, p. 641).

Sir William Phips was already known to me, not for his treasure hunting, but for his later activities. In 1690 Phips attacked Port-Royal, then the capital of the French colony of Acadia (now known as Annapolis Royal) in Nova Scotia. As there were no military officers at the fort and few soldiers, the governor negotiated a surrender with Phips, who promised to let the soldiers leave with their weapons and not to plunder the inhabitants.

When in control of the fort, Phips seized the weapons and locked the inhabitants in the church, assuring them that no looting would occur if they gave an oath of allegiance to the British Crown. Once the oath was given, he went on looting and set the church and 28 houses on fire (among them my ancestors' home).

Afterward, Phips went on to attack Quebec, but that was a complete failure, with the English losing over a thousand men. In 1692 he was appointed governor of the "United Colonies," including the territories of Acadia, or Nova Scotia.

Commemoratives Celebrate Columbus Quincentenary

Three 1992 commemorative coins struck by the United States Mint—a gold $5, a silver $1 and a copper-nickel half dollar—are available in 11 purchase options through the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Coin Program. Prices range from $7.50 and $9.50 for uncirculated and proof half dollars, respectively, to $495 for a six-coin set comprising a three-coin proof set and three-coin uncirculated set. Mintage is limited to 500,000 $5 coins, 4 million silver dollars and 6 million half dollars.

Surcharges of $35 included in the price of each gold $5, $7 for each silver $1, and $1 for each half dollar will endow the Christopher Columbus Fellowship Foundation, created to “encourage and support research, study and labor designed to produce new discoveries in all fields of endeavor for the benefit of mankind.” The Foundation will award fellowships to outstanding individuals, who will be known as “Columbus Scholars.”

The West Point Mint will strike the proof and uncirculated $5 coins; the Philadelphia Mint will produce the proof dollar; the San Francisco Mint will manufacture the proof half dollar; and the Denver Mint will strike the uncirculated dollar and half dollar. Information about the various purchase options for the 1992 United States Columbus Quincentenary coins is available from the U.S. Mint, Customer Service Center, 10001 Aero-

The 1992 United States Christopher Columbus Quincentenary commemorative coins were designed by three U.S. Mint sculptor/engravers. The gold $5, by James Ferrell, bears a portrait of Columbus facing a map of the New World; the reverse, by Thomas D. Rogers Sr., shows the honorary crest of the Admiral of the Oceans. The silver dollar obverse, the work of John Mercanti, features a full-figure rendering of Columbus beside a globe, with his ships in the background; the reverse, also by Rogers, carries a dramatic split image of the Santa Maria and the U.S. space shuttle Discovery. The half dollar obverse and reverse, designed by Ferrell, portray Columbus' landing and his three ships en route to the New World.

Columbus Sets Sail on St. Augustine Medal

A Columbus Quincentenary medal, titled “First Night Out of Palos,” has been sanctioned by the St. Augustine/St. Johns County (Florida) Columbus Commission. The obverse of the medal depicts the Niña, Pinta and Santa Maria as they headed out to sea from Palos, Spain, below a starlit sky. Shown in four circles on the reverse are Don Pedro Menendez, a Spanish soldier who founded and named St. Augustine, the oldest city in North America; the area's new lighthouse, representing St. Augustine's maritime history; the City Gate, a familiar landmark built in 1808; and a watchtower from the Castle of St. Mark, a fort built in 1695 to defend the city from the English and French. The medal's design was conceived by Carl Hoefer and executed by local graphic artist Regine de Toledo.

The St. Augustine Columbus medal is available in antique bronze for

Prince Edward Island and Ontario Quarters Released

The seventh and eighth issues in the "Canada 125" Coin Program, the Prince Edward Island and Ontario quarters, were unveiled at ceremonies in the provinces' respective capitals, Charlottetown and Toronto. The coin program consists of 13 circulating coins—12 quarters, each representing one of Canada's provinces and territories, plus a dollar celebrating the 125th anniversary of confederation. Designs were chosen through an open, nationwide competition.

The Prince Edward Island coin's reverse design, the work of free-lance artist Nigel Graham Roe of Charlottetown, features Cousin's Shore—a rugged, yet beautiful section of the island's northern coastline. The Ontario quarter's reverse, conceived by Greg Salmela of London, Ontario, depicts a windswept jack pine.

In addition to the circulating coins, the Royal Canadian Mint in Winnipeg will produce proof versions of each quarter in sterling silver, available to collectors for $9.95 each, and a proof

BAHAMAS: Series Showcases Five Centuries of History in the Americas

The Central Bank of the Bahamas has authorized a series of 12 sterling silver proof $5 coins called the "500th Anniversary of the Americas." The first three coins commemorate explorer Christopher Columbus, depicting him along with his patrons King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella, standing on the deck of the Santa Maria and landing in the Bahamas.

The balance of coins in the collection mark important events in the Americas during the 500 years since Columbus' first voyage, beginning with the discovery of 'Canada, Jefferson's writing of the Declaration of Independence, the abolition of slavery in the United States, the invention of the electric light bulb, and the quest for freedom led by Bolivar and San Martin. The series continues with the first manned flight by the Wright Brothers, the introduction of assembly-line production by Henry Ford, the opening of the Panama Canal, and the landing of the first men on the moon.

The commemorative reverse designs are the work of Alex Shagin; a portrait of Queen Elizabeth II graces the common obverse. The proofs are struck at

NOW AVAILABLE FOR YOUR COLLECTION: SPECTACULAR NIAGARA FALLS
IN PRECIOUS 22-KARAT GOLD.

Canada is known not only for its natural wonders, but for the exquisite beauty of its coins, as well. Now the Royal Canadian Mint proudly unveils the 1992 22-Karat Gold Coin, celebrating the natural spirit of youth against the backdrop of Niagara Falls.

Made up of the American Falls on the U.S. side and the Canadian, or Horseshoe Falls, Niagara Falls is one of the world's most popular scenic wonders. Visitors can appreciate the powerful force of the Falls from one of three ships called Maid of the Mist.

High purity, low mintage.

Along with its exquisite design, this coin has other qualities with special appeal: limited mintage, high precious metal content and quality craftsmanship. The coin is 91.67% pure or 22-karat gold. It has the superior quality you would expect from the artisans of the Royal Canadian Mint, one of the world's leading producers of commemorative and collectible coins. Mintage is strictly limited to just 25,000 coins worldwide. While millions of visitors will see Niagara Falls this year alone, only a small number of collectors will be able to own this precious coin. Please order now to ensure that you are one of them.

Coin Description.

Proof finish only, and considered the finest grade coin available, it is the third issue in the series of 22-karat gold proof coins authorized by the Government of Canada. Mintage is restricted to a maximum of 25,000 coins worldwide — one of the lowest gold coin mintages set by the Royal Canadian Mint.

Composition: 91.67% gold, 8.33% silver. Total weight: 17.135 grams, of which at least 15.552 grams are fine gold. 29 mm in diameter and 2.0 mm thick. Reeded edge.

Presented in a distinctive custom-made jacquard-weave case, featuring a black background patterned with swirling maple leaves in rich fall hues. Each coin is encapsulated and comes with a numbered Certificate of Authenticity.

Orlando Convention Distinguished by Strong Collector Activity

The ANA launched its second century with a strong 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida. At the close of the five-day show at the Orange County Convention/Civic Center, Convention Director Ruthann Brettell noted, "Even though our attendance (11,000 registered visitors) was lower than we had expected, many collectors and dealers expressed their overall satisfaction." Hobbyists, in particular, were much in evidence at the show, and those dealers offering moderately priced collector material reported steady business.

David Ryder, acting director of the United States Mint, gives Olympic hopefuls from Brown's School of Gymnastics samples of the U.S. commemorative coins celebrating the 1992 Olympic Games.

COLORADO SPRINGS Convention Update

ANA Governor John Jay Pittman, who was inducted into the ANA Hall of Fame at the 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, was appointed to serve as honorary general chairman for the 1993 Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs, March 11-13, 1993.

John Wagner of Apopka, Florida, won a free trip to the 1993 Early Spring Convention. Wagner was one of thousands of people who registered for the free drawing at the 101st Anniversary Convention and through Orlando radio station WDBO. His free trip for two includes round-trip travel via Delta Airlines; three nights at the Broadmoor Hotel, site of the convention; and visits to other Rocky Mountain attractions that can be experienced by all who attend the show.

Hotel and bourse applications for the show are now available through the ANA Convention Department. Just call 719/632-2646 between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m., Monday through Friday, or write to ANA Convention Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

Your support is important to the success of the 1993 Early Spring Convention. Patron forms can be obtained from the ANA Convention Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. A complete list of all patrons will be printed in the official convention program. •

Known to many as the "Clock Man," Harold Anderson (left) surprised Farran Zerbe Memorial Award winner Paul Whitnah with a handmade, personalized pen and holder. Anderson also produced several clocks commemorating the Orlando show, which were auctioned at the ANA Membership reception.

Robert Huot, director of Olympic Coin Programs for the International Olympic Committee, unveiled the commemoratives to be issued by the five participating nations: Australia, Austria, Canada, France and Greece.

Among the 17 world mints participating in the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention were San Marino (above), China (top right) and Norway (right).

The material offered by Virg Marshall, the "Penny Merchant," drew avid cent collectors. Earlier this year, Marshall was the lucky winner of the grand prize in the ANA's 1992 membership recruitment contest—an all-expense-paid trip to Vienna, Austria, courtesy of the Austrian Mint.

One of the biggest attractions in Orlando was the twice-daily parade of ducks at the Peabody Hotel.

EMERGING GIANTS

"Key" coins are once again becoming the focus of Numismatics! The population reports issued by PCGS and NGC have made informed individuals acutely aware of how desirable and undervalued many truly rare and low population coins are when compared to most highly touted "generic" coins. When working with coins of this nature, I believe that it is essential to enlist the help of a specialist. In this way, you can benefit from experience while avoiding the pitfalls.

I have been dealing exclusively in rare date gold coins for over a dozen years. My reputation and knowledge in this field is unsurpassed. I would be pleased to work with you to build your "World Class" collection or investment portfolio.

Please call me today, so we can discuss your needs.

Numismatic Hall of Fame Welcomes John Jay Pittman

ANA Governor John Jay Pittman became a member of the Association in 1943 and since that time has devoted his energies to the ANA and the hobby. His unwavering study and support of numismatics was recognized August 15, 1992, in Orlando, Florida, during the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention, when he became the 55th luminary inducted into the Numismatic Hall of Fame.

Pittman began his deeper involvement with the Association as a member

Canadian Medalist Earns Numismatic Art Award

Dora de Pédery-Hunt, accomplished sculptor and medalist, is the 1992 recipient of the ANA's Numismatic Art Award for Excellence in Medallic Sculpture. Presented August 15 at the Association's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, the award was accompanied by an engraved, 14kt-gold medal designed and donated by the Franklin Mint.

Born before World War I ravaged Europe, de Pédery-Hunt worked hard to prepare for her career in art. She studied sculpture and design at the Royal School of Applied Arts in Budapest, Hungary, from which she received her master's diploma in 1943. After the Second World War, she emigrated to Canada, where she was employed as an art teacher and church interior designer. Her career received a major boost in 1965, when her medals and miniature sculptures were placed on public display for the first time. She also won international acclaim for her unusual jewelry creations.

Her work appears on a Canadian postage stamp honoring Sir Donald Smith, and the Royal Canadian Mint selected her design to grace the $100 gold coin commemorating the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal. She has served as the Canadian delegate to the Fédération Internationale de la Médaille (FIDEM) and holds membership in the American Medallist Sculpture Association, the British Art Medal Society, the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts and the American Numismatic Society. She has also published a book about the art of the medal.

Writes de Pédery-Hunt of her craft, "To create a medal, I have to accept the challenges of working inside the limits of a small disc and obeying the strict rules of the striking, casting and finishing processes. But the clay is soft, and it yields pleasantly, almost too easily to the touch of my fingers. Maybe, after all, these limitations are necessary. I welcome these odds—my medals are the result of a good fight against them, and at the end at least I can look back on a bravely fought battle."

Dora de Pédery-Hunt's design was selected for the $100 gold coin issued to commemorate the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal.

Numismatic Literary Guild Names The Numismatist Best Nonprofit Publication

At the ANA's recent convention in Orlando, Florida, The Numismatist once again swept the "Non-Profit Numismatic Magazine" category in the Numismatic Literary Guild's annual literary award competition.

Named "Best Article" was "The Overprinted Notes of World War II" by James A. Simek and Donald Medcalf, which appeared in the December 1991 issue. "Best Column" honors went to "Coins and Collectors," Q. David Bowers' consistently excellent monthly feature. The December 1991 edition of The Numismatist, which carried a dramatic depiction of the bombing of Pearl Harbor, earned the distinction of "Best Issue."

Convention Auctions Marked by Strong Collector Participation

Although the five-session auction conducted by Heritage Numismatic Auctions at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, August 12-16, featured numismatic specimens to please the most discriminating collector, the sales were not exclusively oriented toward the investor. Comments Heritage Auction Director Bob Merrill, "The number of floor bidders was truly phenomenal. This sale marked the return of real, honest buyers—people who were purchasing coins for their personal collections, not just for resale."

Among the offerings of collector coins were many uncertified pieces. An extensive selection of rare quarter eagles and half eagles—many from the Yarmouth Type Collection—offered serious collectors numerous examples of infrequently seen specimens. An 1863 Coronet quarter eagle from the Garrett Collection realized the highest bid for a single specimen—$66,000.

An 1808 Classic Head cent certified MS-64 "red and brown" by the Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) realized $13,750, and an encapsulated 1824/2 Capped Bust dime certified Proof-65 by the Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC) brought $23,100.

The only mint-state Seated Liberty 1852-O quarter certified by a major grading service was sold for $8,910.

A PCGS Proof-65 1888 gold $3 realized $27,500, and a 1796/5 "small eagle" $5 gold certified AU-53 by NGC changed hands for $18,425. The most expensive Coronet $5, a 1902 PCGS-certified MS-67, fetched $19,525. Two $20 gold pieces, an 1897 Liberty (PCGS MS-64) with cameo contrast and a 1907 Saint-Gaudens high-relief (NGC MS-65), sold for $27,500 and $23,100, respectively.

The 3,490-lot sale realized more than $3.8 million, including the 10-percent buyer's fee on all winning bids. The auction catalog and a copy of prices realized can be obtained for $15 from Heritage Numismatic Auctions, Heritage Plaza, Highland Park Village, Dallas, TX 75205.

Numismatic Fine Arts International, which was officially sanctioned by the ANA to conduct a single-session auction of ancient Greek and Roman coins, echoed Heritage's success, realizing more than $800,000 from the 491 auction lots it offered.

Two categories of support are available: Patron ($10 to $24.99) and Benefactor ($25 or more). All contributions are tax-deductible.

Get a Jump on Baltimore Bourse Tables

ANA member dealers who want to reserve bourse space at the 102nd Anniversary Convention, scheduled for July 28 to August 1, 1993, in Baltimore, Maryland, should request bourse applications from the ANA Convention Office, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. Dealers who apply for a bourse table by December 1, 1992, will be able to select their table location during the Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs, Colorado, in March 1993. Those dealers whose applications for tables are received after December 1, 1992, will be assigned tables on a first-come, first-served basis.

Dealers may elect to share a table with one other independent dealer. The maximum number of individuals allowed to work at one table is four, all of whom must be ANA members employed by the dealer(s) and must wear badges identifying them as such.

Seminars Explain What Every Numismatist Should Know about Grading

Gain a more complete understanding of how U.S. coins should be graded according to the latest ANA and market standards by attending an ANA Coin Grading Seminar. Offered in conjunction with the ANA anniversary and early spring conventions and at the ANA Summer Conference, these popular seminars enable members to acquire the expertise needed by the true numismatist.

The course consists of special slide presentations and hands-on examination of nearly 1,000 significant coins. Copper, silver and gold coinage are covered, with emphasis on uncirculated pieces. Led by ANA Authenticator J.P. Martin together with other well-known numismatists, the sessions detail why accurate grading is necessary, how to follow the standards, what to look for on each coin type, why 11 uncirculated grades were created, and how to use equipment and resources.

For information about the Coin Grading Seminars scheduled for Colorado Springs and Baltimore in 1993, contact ANA Educational Services. •

BRONZES OF MITHRADATES VI OF PONTUS

THE LAST GREAT HELLENISTIC KING

Mithradates VI Eupator Dionysos (120-63 B.C.), king of Pontus on the southern shore of the Black Sea, was the last Hellenistic king to be wholly independent of Rome. At the height of his power, he ruled an empire that extended from the Crimea to the north, to Byzantium to the southwest, Colchis to the southeast, and Cappadocia to the south. Regarding Mithradates as a threat to her authority in the East, Rome fought three bitter wars (89-85 B.C., 83-82 B.C., and 74-63 B.C.) to subdue this proud monarch, who committed suicide rather than submit to Roman authority. The most infamous example of the savagery of these wars occurred in 88 B.C. In an effort to totally eradicate Roman influence in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), Mithradates ordered the slaughter of all Romans and Italians and their families in the cities under his control. Known as the "Asian Vespers," the massacre claimed between 80,000 and 150,000 people according to ancient sources.

Mithradates, whose family origins can be traced to Persian nobility, claimed descent from Darius I of Persia and from Alexander the Great and Seleucus I. By claiming this dual descent, Mithradates presented himself to his Asiatic subjects as the eastern king foretold in prophecies who would drive out the invaders from the West (i.e. the Romans), and to his Greek subjects as the champion of hellenism against the Roman barbarians. Portraits of the king depicted him as the new Alexander.

Bronze coins issued by the cities under Mithradates' control bore the themes of the king's propaganda. The hero Perseus figures prominently on this coinage. Perseus, slayer of the Gorgon Medusa, was claimed as an ancestor both by Alexander the Great and by the kings of Persia. Ares, the Greek god of war also appears on the bronzes, as does Nike, goddess of Victory. The appearance of these two divinities from the Greek pantheon on the coinage of Mithradates was especially appropriate to a king whose lifetime was largely spent waging war in the pursuit of victory over the Romans. Thus, these bronzes symbolized Mithradates links to the Greek and Persian worlds and his attempt to be a bridge between those two worlds.

Due to a recent purchase, we are able to offer two major types of these interesting bronzes. These types were struck at a number of cities in the kingdom, such as the port of Amisus on the southern shore of the Black Sea.

The Quintessential Quincentennial Coin

Almost 500 years ago, coins called "excellentes" were made from gold that could have been taken from Cuban mines or from melted native artifacts at the direction of Christopher Columbus. ANA member Merritt Davis relates that most excellentes were struck in Seville, Spain; others, however, were minted in the Spanish cities of Burgos, Cuenca, Granada, Segovia, Toledo and Valencia. Although each coin shows a mintmark of origin, these rare pieces are not dated.

The obverse design of these coins consists of crowned profiles of Queen Isabella and King Ferdinand, with their names rendered in either Latin or Gothic script. On the reverse, a royal crest is superimposed over an eagle and a legend that translates "Protect Us under the Shadow of Thy Wings." The multi-faceted coat of arms shows the traditional lions and castles (representing Isabella's kingdoms of Castile and Leon), along with branches, eagles and vertical lines (representing Ferdinand's kingdoms of Aragon, Naples and Sicily).

According to Davis, all excellentes were struck from .9896 fine gold and had essentially the same designs. Six denominations were issued—1, 2, 4, 10, 20 and 50 excellentes—each a multiple of 3.5 grams of gold. The most popular was the 2 excellentes, dubbed the "doble (double) excellentes," which measured approximately 27mm in diameter and contained 7 grams of gold. The largest and rarest specimen, the 50 excellentes, weighed about 6 troy ounces.

Says Davis, "First struck in 1497, the excelente endured as a world trade coin beyond the death of Isabella in 1504 and the demise of Ferdinand in 1516" until 1536, when Spanish gold coins came to be denominated in escudos that held 5 percent less gold (.940 fine). However, Davis states, as "testimony to the success of this gold coin as a world standard, 100 years later the Dutch ducat imitated the same recognizable design."

Davis contends that "it is not unreasonable to conjecture that excellentes were in the pocket of Columbus during his third voyage to the New World in 1498 and on his fourth and final trip in 1502. He could have held an excelente in his hand and by gesturing asked the natives where such metal could be found. Later he might have used the coin to show the native chiefs the likenesses of his king and queen."

Columbiana Reproduced on Cards and Tickets

The 1992 souvenir card program offered by American Bank Note Company's Commemoratives (ABNC) includes many issues featuring Columbus bank notes and stamp dies. On October 12, Columbus Day, perhaps the finest of these will be released.

The souvenir card will feature a large bank note produced by American Bank Note Company in 1880 for the Dominican Republic. The 50-peso note features a central vignette depicting Columbus with a Native American woman. Engraved in 1868 by Charles Burt, the vignette is accompanied by two others—Capstan (left) and Industry (right). The card includes a description of the vignettes, the names of the engravers, and the legend 500TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE VOYAGES OF Another popular ABNC collector issue is a set of six cards reprinting the original steel-engraved admission tickets to the World's Columbian Exposition. Among the most desirable of World's Fair souvenirs, the six tickets are representative of their time—an elegant era in which craftsmanship and design were foremost considerations.

These centennial reprints represent the first and only use of the original dies in the last 100 years. A special format chosen to highlight the beauty of the six engravings makes each ticket the

The World's Columbian Exposition souvenir card featuring the Dominican

World's Columbian Expo Sparked Numerous Tributes

"The impact of the Columbian Exposition far exceeded all the World's Fairs that had preceded it," wrote Nathan N. Eglit in Columbiana—The Medallic History of Christopher Columbus and the Columbian Exposition of 1893. The celebration stimulated participation from around the world and generated a variety of numismatic tributes.

Among these items is a French issue designed by W. Mayer. The obverse depicts Columbus landing on New World soil. Clad in armor, he wields a sword in his right hand. Behind him is a group of his fellow adventurers. The inscription reads • DEDICATED TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE IN HONOR OF THE 400TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DISCOVERY OF

Barber's Personal Papers Acquired by Smithsonian

The personal papers of Charles E. Barber, chief engraver at the U.S. Mint from 1880 to 1917, are the latest in a series of substantial donations to the Smithsonian Institution's National Numismatic Collections. Presented by Harvey, Norman and Lawrence Stack of Stack's coin company in New York, the materials provide an important record of the day-to-day operations of American die makers and coiners.

The donation includes Barber's correspondence and drawings related to the dies and coins for 15 nations, a majority of them in Latin America; his notebooks on U.S. coins and medals in his personal collection; and die books maintained by A.W. Straub, foreman of the die makers room at the U.S. Mint from 1880-86, which prove that the proof Trade dollars of 1884 were legitimately struck at the U.S. Mint.

Copies of the Barber papers are available for study at the ANA Resource Center.

The Numismatic Reforms of Ferdinand and Isabella

In the 15th century, Spain's reigning monarchs effected a well-conceived overhaul of the coins that circulated throughout their lands.

by Loren Hazelwood
ANA 95004

THE DUAL MONARCHY of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella at the end of the 15th century has long been recognized as a major turning point in Spanish history. Their marriage set the stage for the formation of a new nation that would quickly grow to control a world empire.

While their joint rule did not immediately merge the separate kingdoms they governed into one country, it did bring stability to a land suffering from extreme political and economic chaos.

Early Spain

THE IBERIAN PENINSULA was conquered by the Romans and incorporated into their empire in the 2nd century B.C. Hispania, as they called it, soon became one of the major provinces of the Roman world and remained so until overrun by successive waves of invading German tribes in the 5th century A.D. The region was finally settled and ruled by the Visigoths, who held power until the forces of Islam crossed the Straights of Gibraltar in 705.

Although the Muslims started with only a small beachhead and a few soldiers in the south, they quickly swept over the entire peninsula. Their expansion into Europe was not stopped until the armies of Islam were defeated by Charles Martel at the Battle of Pointier in southern France (732). Except for a few small pockets of resistance in the northwest, the entire area that is now modern Spain and Portugal was controlled by the Muslims.

For the next seven centuries the forces of Christendom fought against the Muslims and slowly pushed them back down to the bottom of the peninsula. As the reconquest of the land continued, the victorious Christians split into several independent kingdoms that often spent more time fighting among themselves than against the Moors.

By the middle of the 15th century, the Muslims had been isolated in Granada—a small, but very rich, land in the south. Except for the separate Kingdom of Portugal and the small principality of Navarre, the rest of the region was divided between two major powers: the combined kingdoms of Castile and Leon, under Henry IV, and the lands of Aragon, Valencia, Catalonia and the Balearic Islands, ruled by Juan II.

Henry the Impotent

HENRY IV, KING of Castile and Leon from 1454 to 1474, was the only child of the first marriage of Juan II of Castile, the previous monarch. He was half-brother to Isabella and Alfonso, children of the second marriage. Henry was a weak, indecisive and ineffectual ruler, unable to control the proud and powerful aristocrats of the land. History has given him the title of Henry the Impotent both for his inability to rule and his questionable sexual capacity (which led to doubts about the legitimacy of his only daughter and disputes over her right to succeed to the throne).

In an attempt to please the powerful aristocrats and to win their support and friendship, Henry allowed many of them to coin their own money. He originally authorized five royal mints in Castile, but by the end of his reign, more than 150 mints were producing debased coinage.

There is some indication that Henry realized that these debased monies contributed to the very unstable economic conditions in the land. He attempted to institute some reforms, but was too weak to contend with the powerful aristocrats.

WHILE THE CASTILIAN rulers retained the basic coinage system of the captured lands, they . . . gave in to the temptation to increase their wealth by debasing the coinage.

One group of Castilian nobles even endeavored to depose Henry and place Isabella's brother, Alfonso, only 11 years old, on the throne. For three years their rebellion spread rapidly and gained strength as the land prepared for civil war. Then Alfonso died, and the rebels were left without a legitimate leader.

They encouraged Isabella, only 17 at the time, to declare herself queen. She refused to do so and, instead, reached an agreement with Henry to end the strife. As part of the treaty with Henry, Isabella forced him to recognize her as the rightful successor to the throne after his death—implying, though not specifically admitting, that his own daughter was illegitimate.

The country returned to a turbulent, chaotic peace. Henry began negotiations to marry Isabella off to some foreign king or prince. She had other plans, however, and looked around for a husband who could help her secure her power in Castile. Despite Henry's efforts to prevent it, in 1469 she married her cousin Ferdinand, the son of Juan II of Aragon. His father had already made him King of Sicily and heir to the kingdoms of Aragon, Valencia and Catalonia.

The two lived in Castile and kept the peace with Henry. When he died in 1474, they assumed power. After a short struggle with supporters of Henry's daughter, Ferdinand and Isabella became the undisputed rulers of Castile and Leon.

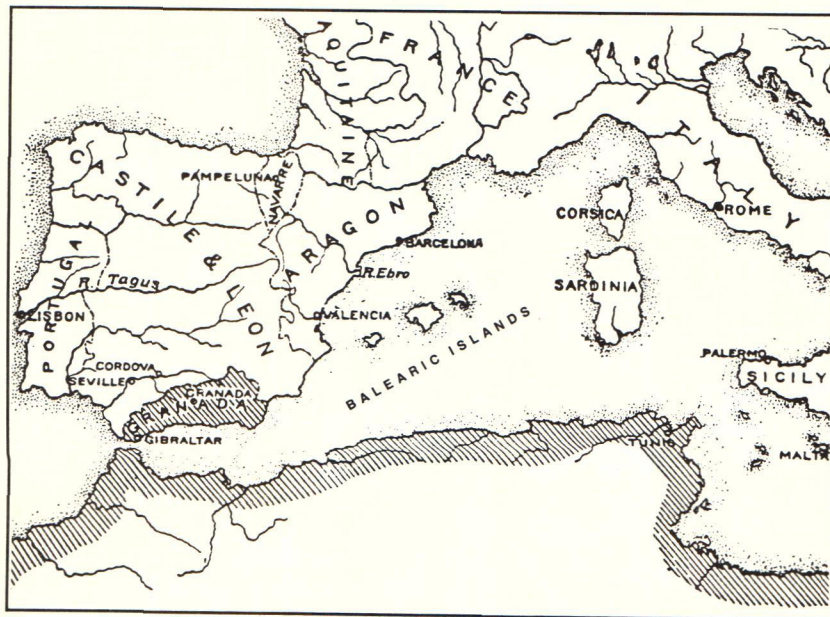

Medieval Coinage of Castile

THE MONETARY SYSTEM inherited by Isabella was essentially a deteriorated relic of the previous Muslim rulers. Castile's expansion had taken the form of a piecemeal reconquest of the land held by the Moors. As new areas were incorporated into the joint crowns of Castile and Leon, they tended to retain the legal, political and economic system already established.

The basic coin in 8th-century Moslem Spain had been the gold dinar weighing 65 grains. The basic silver coin, the dirhem, was equal in value to one gold dinar. After 400 years of Muslim rule, the gold dinar still weighed 64.5 grains. However, in the 12th century a new gold dinar weighing 60 to 61.75 grains was struck. It was called the maravedi after the then ruling Muslim dynasty, the Almoravides.

While the Castilian rulers retained the basic coinage system of the captured lands, they quickly gave in to the temptation to increase their wealth by debasing the coinage. By 1213 the maravedi in Christian hands had shrunk to 14 grains of gold. Under Alfonso the Wise, the maravedi was converted to a silver coin of 26 grains, and the downward spiral of debase-ment began again.

In 1368 the silver maravedi weighed less than 17 grains. The last positive numismatic reform in Castile before Isabella and Ferdinand was the introduction of a new silver coin by Peter I (1350-69). This coin of 3.5 grams was called a real, short for nummus real, or "royal money." By the reign of Henry IV, the maravedi had become a silver coin of no more than 1.5 grains.

Ferdinand's Inheritance

WHILE THE CASTILIANS concentrated their efforts on the inward reconquest of the land, the Iberian kingdoms inherited by Ferdinand (Aragon, Catalonia and Valencia) focused on the larger world of Europe and the Mediterranean. They used their political, diplomatic and military powers to acquire other territories: the Balearic Islands, Sicily and parts of Italy.

During the 15th century, Valencia became the financial capital of the region, filled with traders, bankers and merchants. A large volume of import and export business passed through its ports. Because of this need to deal with other nations, the previous rulers of these lands could not permit debasement of their currency. The coinage had to be well accepted in international markets. However, there was no attempt to unify the coinage systems of the separate regions, even though they were united under one king for many years.

Consequently, Ferdinand inherited several kingdoms with a multiplicity of fairly stable coinages. Some followed Arabic standards (for example, the dinero), while others adopted contemporary European denominations (such as the groat and florin).

The Dual Monarchy

WHEN FERDINAND'S FATHER died in 1479, Ferdinand & Isabella became joint rulers of Castile, Leon, Aragon, Catalonia, Valencia, Sicily and the Balearic Islands. After a 10-year war, they conquered Granada and added it to their possessions. In 1513, after the death of Isabella, Ferdinand seized Navarre without opposition and completed the formation of the country that is now Spain.

However, this centralization of the monarchy did not, by any means, immediately bring about unification of the land. Each of the separate kingdoms retained its own legal system, dialect, customs, legislative body, etc. At the beginning and even during Ferdinand and Isabella's reign, each kingdom continued to live within its own traditions. Only in the 16th century did these nations gradually merge to create the foundation of modern-day Spain.

When Isabella and Ferdinand assumed power in 1474, the money in Castile was worthless. People would not accept Castilian coins in business transactions. When the first Cortes (legislative assembly) met in Toledo in 1480, Isabella introduced a law that once again restricted coinage production to five royal mints: Burgos, Toledo, Seville, Segovia and Corunna. Later, after the Muslims of Granada were defeated in 1492, a sixth mint was placed in that city.

In Valencia in 1481, Ferdinand introduced a new gold coin called an excellente. It weighed 3.56 grams and was modeled after a coin that, at the time, had the greatest acceptance in international markets—the Venetian ducat. In the 13th century, the Italian city-states of Florence and Venice began to strike gold coins that later became the standard, best-accepted coinage throughout Europe and the Mediterranean: the florin and ducat. The latter, first struck in Venice in 1284, was the most popular coin among 15th-century merchants, and thus the most obvious standard to emulate when Ferdinand created the excellente.

AMERICAN NUMISMATIC SOCIETY

KENNETH BRESSETT

Silver reales of the two monarchs. The word real, short for nummus real, meant "royal money."

THE GOLD AND silver brought from the New World were converted to ducats and reales that were rapidly circulated and readily accepted . . .

The excellente was so well received that in 1493 a similar coin was introduced in Catalonia, another major financial center on the Iberian peninsula. Called the principat, the coin was equal in value to the excellente. (Both coins are often referred to as ducats.) Thus began the movement toward standardizing the coinage systems of the lands under joint rule.

The Ordinance of Medina del Campo

THE TIDE OF numismatic reform finally reached Castile in 1497 when Ferdinand and Isabella published the coinage law that eventually formed the basis of the monetary system for Spain (and the Spanish Empire) for centuries. The law was named after the city of Medina del Campo, where the monarchy resided. The ordinance established and defined three coinage media: gold, from which ducats, excellentes or coins of equal value were struck; silver, used to make the newly reintroduced reales; and vellon, an alloy of copper and silver used to make coins of lesser value.

By now the maravedi had been eliminated as an actual coin, although it was retained as a unit of account. The relative values of the new coins were expressed in terms of maravedi. The small vellon coin, called a blanca, was valued at ½ maravedi. One real equaled 34 maravedi (68 blanca), and one ducat (or excellente) was equivalent to 375 maravedi, or 11 reales plus 2 blanca.

The ducat was struck in multiples of 2, 4, 10 and 20, with the crowned busts of the two monarchs facing each other. The coins became very popular and were struck until 1537, even though Isabella died in 1504 and Ferdinand in 1516.

The silver real was issued in multiples of 2, 4 and 8. The 8-real silver cob, popularly referred to as a "piece of eight," was prevalent in the New World. Later, the Spanish milled dollar, also known as a piece of eight, became the most common form of hard currency circulating in the British colonies and early United States.

The new coinage system soon became the standard in Spain and its possessions, helping to bring economic stability to the land. In addition, the Ordinance of Medina del Campo created a monetary system that was flexible enough to meet the needs of the world empire that Spain would create in the 16th century. The gold and silver brought from the New World were converted to ducats and reales that were rapidly circulated and readily accepted throughout the lands of the two monarchs and their European neighbors.

A silver grosso of Ferdinand and Isabella, struck in 1503-04, represents the union of the crowns of Sicily and Naples. The monarchs apparently made no attempt to extend their numismatic reforms to Spain's possessions in Italy.

This copper cavallo was issued by Ferdinand for circulation in Italy in the late 15th century.

The First Coins in the New World

SPANISH COINAGE

Coins unearthed at the site of La Isabela establish the early introduction of European culture and economy to New World inhabitants.

by Alan M. Stahl
ANA 132280

MUCH OF THE motivation for Christopher Columbus' voyages was the search for precious metals for coinage. Among the most significant results was the discovery of huge supplies of gold and silver for the mints of the Old World and the opening of major new mints in the New World. But these successes came too late for Columbus to enjoy; in the years between 1492 and his death in 1506, the chief numismatic implication of his voyages was the introduction of European coinage to the Western Hemisphere.

Many of the indigenous societies of the Americas had exchange economies and used a wide variety of objects as a basis for commerce. Some of these, such as bronze ax blades and gold discs, were metallic artifacts and analogous to Old World coinage except in their lack of indication of governmental authorization. Others, such as jade beads, shell discs and cocoa beans, were similar to other non-metallic currencies worldwide. The use of some of these objects continued and even intensified after contact with Europeans.

The oldest European coin having a reliable context in the New World is an 11th-century Norwegian coin found in 1957 at the excavation of a Native American settlement site at Naskeag Point in Penobscot Bay, Maine. The coin has been well authenticated and its context seems secure, but its transport to the American mainland is attributed to indigenous middlemen who traded between a Norse

The success of Columbus' search for gold and silver came to light after the explorer's death. However, he did witness the introduction of European coinage to the Western Hemisphere.

A donkey stands near the site of the greatest concentration of coin finds in La Isabela. One wall of the warehouse is in the foreground and the ruins of the first church in the New World are in the distance.

settlement in Newfoundland and the Maine Indians rather than to direct contact between the two groups. In any case, this coin, like the Norse settlement, was an ephemeral phenomenon, one that was not to lead to sustained communication.

Continuous interaction between the people and currencies of the Eastern and Western Hemispheres began on October 12, 1492. The site believed to have been the very first spot at which the encounter occurred has yielded a numismatic find. Along with glass beads, metal buckles and potsherds, all of European manufacture, excavations of San Salvador Island in the Bahamas have produced a billion blanca of Henry IV of Spain, minted between 1471 and 1474. The identification of this coin with Columbus is supported by recent discoveries from his first settlement, La Isabela, published here for the first time.

The first voyage of Columbus was a discovery expedition; men were left behind at La Navidad (in present-day Haiti) only because the Santa Maria had foundered there. The second voyage, on the other hand, was planned with the specific goal of setting up permanent settlements. On September 25, 1493, 17 ships containing at least 1,200 men left Spain under Columbus' command with plans for establishing colonies in the New World. They returned to La Navidad to find that all 40 men left behind had perished, a result of quarrels among themselves and with the native inhabitants. Discouraged, Columbus led his ships against the winds along the north coast of Hispaniola, and on January 2, 1494, founded La Isabela, the first European settlement in the New World.

At La Isabela, the colonists erected fortifications and buildings; they planted fields and constructed a pottery kiln. But this settlement proved to be a short-lived experiment; by 1498 Santo Domingo on the south coast of the island had been named the capital of the New World, and the small remnant of the original population that had survived fire, epidemics and mutinies left La Isabela for the new settlement.

The site of La Isabela has been investigated for at least a century. Systematic excavations have been conducted for the last five years under the sponsorship of the Dominican National Park Services and the direction of Professor José F. Maria Cruxent of the Universidad Francisco de Miranda in Venezuela and Professor Kathleen A. Deagan of the University of Florida. The foundations of three buildings have been excavated and identified as a church, a large warehouse for supplies, and the house used by Columbus. In addition, post holes have been found indicating that thatched-roof huts were inhabited by more than a thousand Europeans, and that a native settlement adjoined. Over a half million artifacts have been excavated and cataloged, including armor, glassware, nails, rings and bricks. In March of this year, I was invited to visit the site and examine and photograph the 76 coins found there; the coins themselves remain in the Dominican Republic.

Only one of the excavated coins is of Ferdinand and Isabella, a silver 1-real piece found just weeks before my visit. This seems remarkable until one considers that only four of the coins unearthed are silver, and that Ferdinand and Isabella issued no low-denomination billon or bronze coins between their accession in 1474 and their major coin reform in 1497. The 1-real coin found at La Isabela was produced by the Toledo mint between 1474 and 1497. The other silver coins from the site are a 1 real and two ½ reales, all of Spain's Henry IV, who reigned from 1454 to 1474.

Most of the coins found are billon, an alloy containing copper and a relatively small amount of silver, typical of the low-denomination coins of late medieval Europe. Fifty-nine of them are blancas, which picture a castle on one side and a lion on the other, symbolic of Henry's joined kingdoms of Castile and Leon.

In the early years of Henry's reign, a wide range of billon coins were produced in varying weights by poorly regulated mints. Finally, in 1471 he introduced this relatively well-controlled issue, which appears to have driven all of the earlier billon coins out of circulation. This issue was so successful that Ferdinand and Isabella issued no billon coins in their own names for the first two decades of their reign; the only low-denomination coins circulating in Spain at the time of Columbus' departures in 1492 and 1493 would have been these old issues of Henry IV. Also in the finds is a fragment of an older Castilian coin, probably of the 14th century.

In addition to the blancas of Castile-Leon, coins were found at La Isabela from the three other independent Christian kingdoms of the Iberian peninsula. Six billion ceitils of Portugal bear the names of King Alfonso V (1438-81) and John II (1481-95). A small billon coin of Navarre represents the joint reign of John II and Catherine (1484-1512). On a tiny fragment weighing less than a tenth of a gram, the letters "ARA" are enough to attribute the coin to Aragon, though the date is uncertain. Two of the other coins found are from Italy—a minuto of 15th-century Genoa and a soldo of Aquileia in the name of Louis of Teck (1412-37). Three of the excavated coins are so worn and corroded as to be indecipherable.

The largest silver coin excavated at La Isabela is a real of Spain's King Henry IV (1454-74).

Fifty-nine of the 76 coins recovered at the site are blancas of Henry IV, minted after 1471.

The predominance of coins of Henry IV confirms the early habitation of this site, and the lack of billon issues of Ferdinand and Isabella demonstrates the town's abandonment soon after 1497. These finds correspond to the coin discovered at San Salvador, supporting the identification of that site as the location of the first encounter of people of the Old and New Worlds.

The discoveries at La Isabela are of numismatic importance in that they present a detailed view of low-denomination Spanish coinage at a specific time that is unparalleled in Spain itself. These historically significant coins serve to illustrate the very earliest introduction of European culture and economy to the New World.

Santa Maria Drops Anchor on Guadeloupe Note

A World War II note issued by a tiny island in the West Indies confuses Columbus' voyages of discovery.

by Fred Schwan

MEL STEINBERG & SON

IT IS NOT particularly surprising that Christopher Columbus has been honored by Guadeloupe. The great explorer landed on the tiny West Indies island in 1493 and named it for the monastery of Santa Maria de la Guadeloupe in Estremadura, Spain. However, the manner and details of Guadeloupe's commemoration are more than a bit unusual.

In 1942 (an anagram of 1492?), the height of World War II and the 450th anniversary of the discovery of America, the Bank of Guadeloupe issued five notes, three of which have a clear Columbus theme. Although the other two notes are not directly related to Columbus, one has an interesting connection to the country's coinage.

Before the war, all notes for the Bank of Guadeloupe were printed by the Bank of France. However, after 1940 arrangements were made for the island's paper money to be printed in the United States. The firm selected was the E.A. Wright Bank Note Company of Philadelphia, which also printed money for Martinique, French Guiana, Morocco and French West Africa. Founded in 1872, the firm had printed a huge array of stock certificates, checks, stationery, diplomas and even Depression scrip, but it had never produced actual bank notes.

The notes issued by the Bank of Guadeloupe consisted of 5-, 25-, 100-, 500- and 1,000-franc denominations. The vignettes on the 100 and 1,000 francs were of local significance, but not associated with Columbus. Unfortunately, no detailed information is available regarding the circumstances of the notes' designs.

The 5-franc note features a portrait of Columbus, while the 25 francs depicts an antique chart of Guadeloupe. The most interesting vignettes, however, appear on the 500-franc denomination. Two distinct varieties of 500-franc notes (as well as 1,000-franc notes) were produced—a large and a small size—and both are very rare. Indeed, the very existence of the small variety was doubted by various authorities until confirmed by illustrations in some major catalogs.

The 500-franc varieties feature a vignette of a sailing ship identified

On the surface, the use of the Santa Maria on the 500-franc note seems logical. But, in actuality, the ship never made it to Guadeloupe.

MEL STEINBERG & SON

IN THIS CASE, it is particularly disappointing that no information is available concerning the details of the design process for these notes.

as the Santa Maria. Actually, the renderings of the vessel are quite different, but both are clearly labeled "Santa Maria." (The fact that the notes share similar vignettes may have contributed to the confusion regarding the existence of the small-sized issue.)

On the surface, the use of the Santa Maria seems to be consistent with the Columbus theme on the Bank of Guadeloupe notes. But, there is a great flaw in this logic.

During Columbus' first voyage, at midnight on Christmas Day in 1492, a careless steersman ran the Santa Maria aground in Haiti, and the ship had to be abandoned. It was during his second voyage in 1493 that Columbus "discovered" Guadeloupe. Therefore, the appropriateness of the vignettes is in serious doubt. The Santa Maria never made it to Guadeloupe!

In this case, it is particularly disappointing that no information is available concerning the details of the design process for these notes. Was the Columbus theme conceived by the Bank of Guadeloupe or the E.A. Wright Bank Note Company? Who approved the final designs? It would be equally interesting to know if there were contemporary objections to the Santa Maria vignettes based on the lack of historical accuracy.

Although no specific information has surfaced concerning acceptance of the Columbus notes, it is well known that paper money printed in the United States in lieu of Bank of France notes was unpopular in many areas. In most cases, notes of U.S. manufacture were replaced as soon as possible after the war by the more distinctive notes of France. This attitude frequently hampered circulation of the U.S. product—an unusual application of Gresham's Law.

It cannot be stated with certainty that these circumstances existed in Guadeloupe, but it is likely they did. Comments about the designs might very well have appeared in contemporary publications. (Many years ago, I spent several days poring over microfilm of Guadeloupe newspapers looking for such information. I could not find any mention, although I might have fared better if I could read French!)

A few more observations about the 500- and 1,000-franc notes might be of interest. The backs of the large-size 500 francs and both varieties of the 1,000-franc issue carry renderings of a compass rose, certainly in keeping with the theme of Columbus and discovery. The 1,000-franc notes also bear an intriguing portrait of Karukera, an Indian famous in Guadeloupe history. The vignette is nearly identical to the profile of Karukera that appeared on Guadeloupe's only modern coinage—the 1903

The portrait of Karukera on Guadeloupe's 1903 and 1921 copper-nickel 50-centime and 1-franc coins may have served as the model for the vignette on the 1,000-franc note.

and 1921 copper-nickel 50-centime and 1-franc pieces. It is very possible that the coinage served as the model for the E.A. Wright artist preparing the vignette.

The wartime notes issued by the Bank of Guadeloupe constitute a singular tribute to Columbus' voyage of discovery. They also suggest mysteries, contradictions and areas in need of additional research. •

The front of the Guadeloupe 1,000-franc note pictures Karukera, while the reverse depicts a compass rose.

The Coinage of German East Africa

Germany's efforts at empire-building in Africa provide an interesting historical backdrop to a unique coinage series.

by Mark A. Benvenuto
ANA 150911

Inscribed on the reverse of this copper 1890 1 pesa is "German Company" in Arabic and Swahili, along with the date based on the Moham-medan calendar. The obverse carries the Imperial eagle.

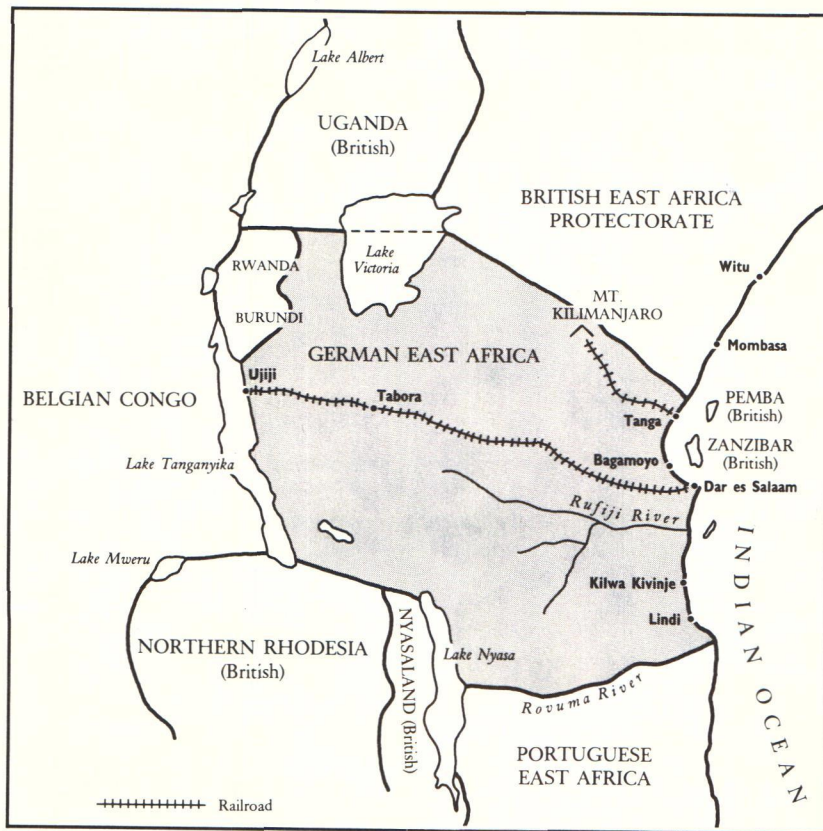

ANA MUSEUM

THE COINAGE OF German East Africa is a tangible link to a chapter of the relatively recent past that seems to have been forgotten. United States history is intertwined with that of Britain, France and Spain—three of the major colonizing powers in post-Renaissance Western European history. But Germany, a late-comer on the colonial scene, never laid specific claim to lands in North America. Germany's entire colonial experience spanned less than 100 years, concluding at the end of World War I. However, that brief time proved historically fascinating.

German colonization in Africa began with the German East African Company, known as the Deutsch Ostafrikanische Gesellschaft (DOAG). A central figure in the establishment of the DOAG was the infamous and rather colorful Dr. Karl Peters. Peters and another African explorer, Count Joachim Pfeil, dissatisfied with the existing colonization organizations within Germany, split from them and set up the "German East African Company." Peters himself probably hampered fund-raising for the company—large banking houses and other possible capital sources found his reputation unsavory and deemed him an investment risk.

In an effort to raise money, Peters and Pfeil employed an underhanded method of obtaining treaties from the local African chieftains they encountered during their first exploratory voyages. The two found the headmen more amenable to giving away rights and land while intoxicated, and ensured that such a condition was induced. With enough "treaties" in hand, Peters was able to obtain a charter for the DOAG from a reluctant Chancellor Otto von Bismarck that included rights for coinage. The earliest pieces produced are dated 1890.

German East Africa, 1914

A portrait of Kaiser Wilhelm II is depicted on the obverse of the 1 rupie of 1892. The arms of the Deutsch Ostafrikanische Gesellschaft (DOAG) are displayed on the reverse.

ANA MUSEUM

The monetary unit chosen for German East Africa was the rupie, in deference to Arab and Indian traders established on the eastern coastal strip of Africa. The rupie was divided into 64 pesa, akin to the British Indian rupee. The 1-pesa reverse inscription "German Company" in Arabic and Swahili is accompanied by the date from the Mohammedan calendar. The 2-rupie coin competed with some success with other crown-sized silver coins of the area, specifically the Maria Theresa taler. Data about the pesa and the ¼-, ½-, 1- and 2-rupie coins, engraved by Emil Weigand and Otto Schultz and produced at the Berlin Mint, is listed in Table 1.

The rupies share a common obverse depicting the crowned Kaiser Wilhelm II. Their reverses differ only in the denomination that each one carries. The 1 pesa bore a different design, featuring the Imperial eagle on the obverse and the "German Company" inscription enwreathed on the reverse.

The company's problems began immediately. Although granted sovereign rights to an area on Africa's eastern coast, it had far too little power to enforce those rights and too little capital to finance a structure that

THE RESULT WAS a consistent, continual loss of capital, and frequent, sometimes bloody native uprisings, the first of which occurred in 1888 . . .

German Chancellor Otto von Bismarck reluctantly approved a charter for the Deutsch Ostafrikanische Gesellschaft that included rights for coinage.

The government changed to a decimal coinage system in 1904, with 100 heller equal to 1 rupie. The rupie obverse carried the same obverse portrait of the kaiser, but the DOAG reverse was replaced.

ANA MUSEUM

could project such power. Added to this was the inexperience and, at times, actual cruelty of the colonial administrators, such as Peters. The result was a consistent, continual loss of capital, and frequent, sometimes bloody native uprisings, the first of which occurred in 1888 before any coins had been issued.

One result of this first uprising was that an Imperial commissioner was appointed and "German ships, German men, and German gold were poured into East Africa to quell the revolt," according to M.E. Townsend. Money, men and equipment were allocated through the Reichstag by explaining that such were needed to crush the slave trade (an actual concern and desire, though not the true reason in this instance).

After the first uprising, the Deutsch Ostafrikanische Gesellschaft was unable to function satisfactorily in the political arena, especially while attempting to rebuild the devastated southern plantations. The two responsibilities proved beyond the scope of the company's best administrators. A multitude of British, German and Zanzibar "sphere of influence" conflicts forced Chancellor Bismarck to settle all border disputes. The Anglo-German Treaty of 1890 achieved that goal while effectively transforming the DOAG into a privileged economic entity.

The Imperial Government assumed control of German East Africa

(something Bismarck was loathe to do), yet granted quite favorable terms to the DOAG, allowing it to continue minting coins, which fell under a separate German East African Bank. Accordingly, until 1902, coins were produced bearing the DOAG reverse.

The coinage and actual monetary system of German East Africa changed in 1904. The government instituted a decimal system, making 100 heller equal to 1 rupie. The rupie and heller pieces were minted with no changes to the rupie obverses. The DOAG reverse was replaced by one stating "Deutsch Ostafrika" (German East Africa), the corresponding denomination, date and mintmark.

The 1- and ½-heller pieces had an obverse showing the Imperial crown, the legend DEUTSCH OSTAFRIKA and the date. The reverses give the denomination and mintmark within a wreath. In 1908, 5- and 10-heller pieces were added. In 1913 the weight and composition of the 5 heller was altered. The mintmarks for this series are J, denoting Hamburg, and A, representing Berlin. Data about these coins is listed in Table 2.

During this period, German involvement in the colony steadily increased, however reluctantly it was undertaken. Native revolts continued, but inevitably were put down. Missionary activity among the native population and scientific study of area flora and fauna also accelerated. The feelings of people within Germany itself were initially enthusiastic. This enthusiasm lessened with time, but never seemed to fade entirely.

Attitudes within governmental bodies responsible for the colony were always economically flavored. They believed more profitable domestic economic ventures could be found; yet competition with other colonizing nations, scientific progress, missionary activity, and the belief in the white man's destiny and duty to civilize the world influenced support within a money-conscious Reichstag.

With the advent of World War I, all aspects of life in German East Africa, including its coinage, changed overnight. An early British naval blockade proved effective and forced the area to become politically and economically independent. Governor Heinrich Schnee tried extremely hard, ultimately in vain, to maintain the colony as a neutral area, under the provisions of the Congo or Berlin Act of 1885. Fortunately for Schnee, a new commander for the small colonial Schutzentruppe (defense force), Lieutenant Colonel Paul von Lettow-Vorbeck, arrived early in 1914. He had no illusions that the British would allow Germany's colonies the cover of neutrality.

Copper 5-heller pieces introduced in 1908 bore the Imperial crown on the obverse, and the enwreathed denomination and mintmark on the reverse. The weight and composition of the 5 heller was changed in 1913; its design resembled the 10 heller of 1908 and 1910.

Soon-to-be-general Von Lettow (as he preferred to be called), proved to be a military genius and remains the unacknowledged father of guerilla warfare. He realized at the war's onset that East Africa could in no way win the European war. He set out, therefore, to engage as many Allied troops as possible, to prevent them from fighting German mainland forces. With troops that never exceeded 17,000 men, most of them native Askari, he kept a diverse Allied force of English, South African, Belgian, British Indian, and Portuguese numbering as high as 250,000 busy until the armistice of 1918.

Coinage was hardly at the top of Von Lettow's priority list, but he did order that spent brass from grenade and shell casings and other war materiel be saved and sent to Tabora, a city on the central rail line, there to be coined into 5- and 20-heller pieces. The impromptu Tabora mint also coined 15-rupie gold pieces, sometimes called "Tabora sovereigns," from the gold of the native Sekenke mines. A variety of fascinating stories have sprung up around these gold pieces. (My favorite concerns the dies and their alleged delivery to German East Africa via U-boat!)

The mint itself was situated in the Tabora railway station and used a remarkably bizarre collection of machinery to produce these emergency pieces, including a palm oil press and machines originally designed to roll raw rubber. In 1918 Dr. Friedrich Schumacher, the head of the operation, published a detailed account of the entire Tabora minting operation. It appears that Schumacher and his personnel did an excellent job of producing uniform coinage under truly primitive conditions.

Although security was tighter and more of a problem for gold rather than brass coin production, the biggest hurdle the makeshift mint encountered was processing brass into a uniform thickness for striking. The use of other metals for minor coinage was considered but rejected, because it was believed that brass was more common within the colony.

The brass 5- and 20-heller pieces each show the Imperial crown, the date and the letters DOA on the obverse. The denomination and mintmark appear within a laurel wreath on the reverse. Several varieties of the 20-heller piece exist and are pictured in Krause's Standard Catalog of World Coins.

The 15-rupie piece displays the Imperial eagle surrounded by the words DEUTSCH OSTAFRIKA and 15 RUPIEN on the obverse. The reverse features an elephant and a mountain landscape, and the date and mintmark in the exergue. Whether the mountain is Kilimanjaro (a northern border point between German East Africa and British East Africa), the reader must decide. I found no conclusive evidence, although Schumacher himself, in a letter to D.D. Yonge, wrote that the mountain was indeed Kilimanjaro. (He was 80 years old when he corresponded with Yonge, and this statement contradicts his own article, written much closer to the time of the coin's actual production.) Two varieties of this piece exist; both are shown in the Standard Catalog of World Coins. All these emergency pieces are dated 1916, the year Tabora fell to the advancing Allied armies. Data about these pieces appears in Table 3.

After the seizure of Tabora, the de facto military government issued paper rupie notes. These notes must have seen extensive use, because a rather unsuccessful British attempt was made to counterfeit them. There are no known cases of the Allied forces trying to counterfeit the 5-heller, 20-heller or 15-rupie pieces, although the second 15-rupie variety has sometimes erroneously been called a counterfeit.

When the war ended, a haggard but unvanquished German force surrendered upon receiving proof that the armistice had indeed been signed. The infant League of Nations divided German East Africa between Britain and Belgium, and Germany's colonial period ended. In 1938 Adolf Hitler was offered a choice of Germany's previous colonies or areas of Czechoslovakia. He chose the European territories, and a chapter of numismatic history closed.

During World War I, 5- and 20-heller pieces were coined at a makeshift mint in Tabora from spent grenade and shell casings and other materiel.

Taking the Obsolete Challenge

Whether a happy coincidence or the result of careful planning, collecting and exhibiting broken bank notes can evolve into a lifetime hobby.

by Dean Oakes
LM 510

IT IS UNLIKELY you would suddenly decide "I'm going to get a hobby, and that hobby is going to be collecting old issues of paper money." If by chance you do set your mind on such an avocation, you would need information about this challenging pursuit. Clubs and club publications, the public or ANA library, and national hobby publications all are good sources. I'd recommend a few hours and dollars spent on books about paper money to become familiar with this collecting field.

Generally, though, an interest in obsolete bank notes doesn't develop that way. Somehow you come into possession of an old piece of paper money. A note found between the pages of an old book or inherited from a family member could pique your interest. This chance meeting might easily lead you to wonder how a particular note came into being or where it has been. Once you become interested in learning the history of a note, alone or with others, would then introduce these notes into the channels of commerce, obtaining solid money or credit in return for the worthless currency. This, of course, was illegal, and some perpetrators were caught. Punishment was swift, but worth the risk to the many who succeeded. Tar and feathers wore off in time—hanging was permanent.

A good example of a remainder note, this specimen was issued by a bank that operated from 1838 to 1850 and redeemed all of its outstanding circulation.

“Remainder” notes were those left over when a firm went broke or stopped doing business. Unlike the issuers of the fraudulent notes mentioned above, these banks or merchants were solvent and reputable for a period of time, and their notes indeed circulated. Perhaps the printer held several sheets of notes until the issuer could pay for them, inadvertently saving them for collectors. Remainder notes usually are not signed, but some carry one or two authorized signatures. Those notes having signatures generally are not numbered or dated and usually were not officially issued.

One example of remainder notes are the Iowa Statehood issues produced by the Miners Bank of Dubuque. This bank originally was chartered by Wisconsin Territory in 1836, changed to Iowa Territory in 1839, and then to Iowa Statehood in 1846. Each change created remainder notes. The notes did circulate, and the bank was solvent and redeemed the notes until its close. An issued specimen is a rarity compared to a remainder note.

Many remainder notes were signed by unauthorized individuals with the intention of passing them as money. In at least one instance, a city official ordered a large quantity of notes, but when they arrived, the city council voted not to issue or pay for them. Said official then gave the notes to soldiers leaving for the Civil War, telling them to get what they could for them and return 50 percent to him.

However, a majority of the notes that circulated were issued by legitimate banks, merchants or towns. These issuers had every intention of providing goods, services or funds in return for the notes that were presented in payment.

Redeemed notes often were reissued. Sometimes merchants or banks held groups of notes for possible reissue, thereby saving them for collectors to enjoy today. The usual course of events, however, was that the notes were issued and redeemed within a short time and then burned. This helped issuers sleep better at night, since no possibility existed of incurring the liability for the notes again.

ALTHOUGH THESE NOTES were part of many sheet configurations (such as $2-$3-$5-$10), they usually were issued one per sheet.

For the collector, issued notes provide three things not normally included on unissued, proof or remainder notes: the signatures of the people involved, the dates they were issued, and serial numbers. The main disadvantage of collecting these notes is their condition, a drawback that is far outweighed by the advantages.

From a historical standpoint, the issued note is superior to the remainder, proof or unissued note. The signatures on the note offer a peek into local history. Often you can find out who the individuals were and their standing in the community. The serial numbers and range of issue dates help the researcher understand local economies. Were they the same as those in the rest of the state or nation? Was the note issued primarily to promote the sale of a product, or was it the only form of paper money available? Did the signatories have credibility in the community or were the issuers in the area only a short period of time, leaving a great deal of their paper unredeemed?

Collecting obsolete notes by denomination also is challenging. The $3 bill has been popular as a collectible since 1862, when the new United States currency failed to include that denomination. Although these notes were part of many sheet configurations (such as $2-$3-$5-$10), they usually were issued one per sheet. Even $3 remainder notes, such as those of the Dubuque Central Improvement Company, were in demand.

In the late 1950s, the Lawrence Brothers of Anamosa, Iowa, purchased about 700 each of $1 and $3 notes. They priced them at $2 over their face value, though both were no more than printed pieces of paper. The $3 bills sold out first, despite that the brothers increased the price to $6 and then $8. Consequently, a $3 obsolete note is generally a scarcer denomination of that issue.

There are many scarce denominations, of course. The 10-cent, 50-cent, $500 and $1,000 notes are

The notes of the State Bank of Iowa were as sound as a dollar throughout its seven-year life. It gave Iowa a head start on national banking, as all 15 branches converted to national bank status by 1865.

Fraser and the Buffalo Nickel

BEGINNING IN 1907, a series of designs was introduced that would, over the next 15 years, completely transform the face of United States coinage. It was in that year that new eagles and double eagles bearing the masterful art of Augustus Saint-Gaudens were placed in circulation. America's preeminent sculptor, Saint-Gaudens had been commissioned by President Theodore Roosevelt to elevate the art of our coinage to the levels attained by the ancient Greek coiners of the 5th century B.C.

Such an ambitious undertaking was rare in the history of the United States Mint. Previous coin designs had been prepared entirely within the insulated environment of the Mint establishment, with the result that practicality usually dominated aesthetic considerations. An enlightened leader, Roosevelt was determined to change this monopoly, and Saint-Gaudens would be his instrument of revolution.

Alas, the great sculptor died just as his golden masterworks were being prepared for circulation, and the further projects that had been envisioned were seemingly lost. Even so, as Roosevelt's term was ending in 1909, the movement that he had conceived served as an inspiration to others of like mind. The Lincoln cent, introduced later that year, was a radical departure from the allegorical goddesses of previous U.S. coins and was hailed by numismatists and the public alike.

Within the Treasury Department, some thought was given to which coins could be redesigned. The Law of 1890 prohibited the introduction of new designs for any denomination more often than once in 25 years. This meant that the only coins then eligible for redesign were the 5-cent piece and the silver dollar. The latter hadn't been coined since 1904, and a resumption of striking didn't seem likely anytime soon. This left the 5-cent piece as the focus of attention.

The Mint's chief engraver, Charles Barber, began preparing models for a new nickel featuring a portrait of Washington. These were dated 1910, and a few pattern strikes were made. It would be a feather in Barber's cap if Treasury Secretary Franklin MacVeigh were to select his design. The past three years had witnessed the introduction of no less than five new coins featuring the work of outside artists. Although none of the superseded designs had been Barber's, that of the current 5-cent piece was his work—the familiar Liberty Head nickel of 1883.

News that the Treasury Department was considering a replacement for this coin attracted the attention of James Earle Fraser, an accomplished sculptor who had been one of Saint-Gaudens' star pupils. Fraser, then 35 years of age, took the initiative by proposing to Mint Director George E. Roberts that he take on the task himself. Already renowned for his sculptural works depicting native Americans, Fraser envisioned a tribute featuring a portrait bust on one side and a bison on the other.

Despite a false start, in which Roberts asked Fraser to model what was by then a redundant Lincoln head, the artist began preparing sketches for his proposed, "purely American" coin. For a time, some thought apparently was given to conducting an open competition for new designs. Fraser's enthusiasm and proven competence eventually overruled this notion, and by the end of 1911 it was all but certain that he would receive the commission.

Confirmation of this was given on January 13, 1912, when Secretary

Portrait of the Artist

James Earle Fraser, the creator of the Buffalo nickel, was born in Winona, Minnesota, in 1876. Raised on the northern prairies of the Midwest, he witnessed the sorrowful plight of both the Native American and the bison.

He displayed a precocious talent for fashioning three-dimensional figures from materials at hand and was accepted as a student at the Art Institute of Chicago when not yet 16. Despite a lifetime of achievement, his first major work was destined to remain his best known. The End of the Trail, which Fraser completed while still in his teens, attracted the attention of the art community and earned for its creator an invitation to study at the École des Beaux Arts in Paris.

After a memorable five years in the City of Light, Fraser returned to America and continued his studies under the guidance of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, who was hailed as the most brilliant sculptor of his age. In turn, Saint-Gaudens considered Fraser his most gifted protégé. During this period, Fraser completed numerous portrait busts and other works, in addition to teaching at the Art Students' League in New York City from 1906-11.

In the same year that the Buffalo nickel entered circulation, Fraser married Laura Gardin, a fellow artist of renown and the future sculptor of several commemorative half dollars. In the 40 years that followed, until his death in 1953, Fraser completed dozens of commissioned works in a variety of sculptural forms. His Theodore Roosevelt Memorial at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City included the full figure of an Indian chief. A smaller work titled "Buffalo Herd" was completed in 1950. Cast in bronze, it depicts a stampede of adult bison and calves.

MacVeigh asked Director Roberts to inform Fraser of his approval. Given the go-ahead to complete his work, Fraser refined his models over the next five months, producing several reductions in differing reliefs. Viewing these reductions, the Secretary asked Fraser to further lower the relief of the models, as the restrictions of high-speed production required that the dies be filled by a single blow of the press. Fraser's revised work was accepted by the Secretary, with further praise coming from the Commission of Fine Arts.

News of the intended redesign of the 5-cent piece had been reported by the press for some months when a problem arose. The manufacturers of vending machines and other coin-operated devices were never proponents of such change, but a redesign of the nickel was even more certain to prompt a backlash, as it was then the most widely used coin for this purpose.

Among the parties most concerned was the Hobbs Manufacturing Company, which marketed a machine that automatically detected counterfeit coins. Fearing that its discrimination mechanism would not function properly with the new nickels, Mr. Hobbs expressed his concern to Director Roberts, who then arranged a meeting between Fraser, Hobbs and a Mr.

Actual Size: 21.21mm

A "purely American" coin, James Earle Fraser's Buffalo nickel was modified several times before it was released into circulation.

Reith, the machine's inventor.

Any hope that the new nickels would be ready in time for the coming year was dashed when the parties failed to reach a compromise. Fraser went so far as to furnish Hobbs with electrotype shells of his models for testing and modification. The changes demanded by Hobbs were unthinkable to Fraser, who had carefully worked out the proper balance and scale of his models over the course of a year. His stance that the Hobbs Manufacturing Company was in a better position to modify its machine than he was to modify his designs was received with sympathy by Roberts, who nevertheless wanted the artist to make as many of the requested changes as he could without impairing the ultimate work.

Sensing that the situation was at an impasse, Secretary MacVeigh urged Roberts to give Fraser final approval for the existing reductions. This was done, and the finished work was forwarded to Chief Engraver Barber at the Philadelphia Mint for production of hubs and dies. Trial strikes were successfully produced on January 7, 1913. As the production run was about to commence, Hobbs again intervened, complaining to Roberts that further changes still needed to be made. After examining one of the trial strikes, the manufacturer charged that modifications originally agreed upon had been overlooked.

MacVeigh and Roberts, aware of their sensitive positions as political appointees, did not wish to dismiss these claims, and Fraser was again called upon to make further refinements. With each compromise by Fraser and the Mint, Hobbs' demands seemed increasingly outrageous. A final meeting on February 15 was attended by all parties and their respective attorneys.

Roberts seemed to be on the verge of paying Fraser for his work to date and simply scrapping the entire project, but MacVeigh was more determined to see it through. In a long letter to the Director following this meeting, MacVeigh presented his arguments against further changes to Fraser's work and concluded by saying, "You will please, therefore, proceed with the coinage of the new nickel."

This, in fact, was done. The first Indian Head/Buffalo nickels coined for circulation were struck on February 17 and released on March 4. (By sheer coincidence, this was one day before President Woodrow Wilson's first inaugural.) While the coins met with almost unanimous praise, their introduction in commerce quickly revealed another design problem that had eluded even the nitpicky Mr. Hobbs.

It was evident from just the slightest amount of wear that the coin's denomination FIVE CENTS would wear off after only a few years' use. While the design was distinctive enough to preclude any doubt as to the coin's face value, the Mint was overly sensitive on this point, remembering the fiasco of 1883.

The Liberty Head nickel, introduced in 1883, had featured a large Roman numeral "V" as its sole indication of value. Capitalizing on the nickel's similarity in size to the half eagle, a few opportunists plated these coins and passed them as gold $5 pieces before the design became familiar to the public. Addition of the word CENTS to subsequent issues of this type solved the problem, but the lesson learned from that experience still persisted in the collective memory of Mint officers.

Chief Engraver Barber strengthened the denomination on one working die by hand and struck an example for comparison with the regular issues. Fraser approved the revision, but refrained from any additional involvement with the project. Seizing this opportunity, Barber modified the reverse hub by placing the words "FIVE CENTS" within an exergue cut into the grassy plain. While protecting the denomination from excessive wear, this change also diminished, to some degree, the boldness of Fraser's original rendition.

Further succumbing to his own artistic prejudices, Barber was unable to resist smoothing out the roughened fields that characterized the original models. Fraser had employed this treatment deliberately, as it was in vogue among medalists at the time.

The result of these alterations was a distinctive second type of Buffalo nickel. Of interest to collectors is that the transition occurred during 1913, yielding two types in a single year from all three mints. Although this change-over occurred shortly after the coin's initial circulation, the respective quantities coined at each mint of both types are approximately equal. Type 1 coins are more common today, as the first specimens of a new design generally are saved in large numbers by the public. All Buffalo nickels coined in subsequent years were Type 2, although minor modifications made to the obverse hub in 1916 could be used to argue for a third type.

The passage of time would prove that Barber should have done something to protect the coin's date, as well. This important feature was exposed to rapid wear, being among the highest elements in Fraser's design. Knowledge of this fact came too late to save thousands, perhaps millions of nickels from eventual obscurity. How different collecting these coins would be if every key-date piece remained identifiable.

The attractiveness of the Buffalo nickel would at times be overshadowed by poor-quality examples struck with inadequate pressure by overworked dies. This is particularly true with respect to nickels coined at the Denver and San Francisco Mints from 1917 through 1926. Some of the scarcest dates are made more so in higher grades by having been indistinct from their inception. Nickels having much of their original luster, yet only the detail of a low-grade coin, are plentiful from this period. Assembling a complete set consisting of well-struck, problem-free examples is quite an achievement.

When its 25-year minimum life span was reached in 1938, the Buffalo nickel was unceremoniously discarded in favor of the current design featuring President Thomas Jefferson and his home, Monticello. The old issues remained in circulation in ever-diminishing numbers through the mid 1960s. The occasional odd piece found after that time is almost certain to be dateless. With the growing demand for such coins in jewelry manufacture, even these are rarely seen. The Buffalo nickel has become just a memory for most, but its place among collectors is secure. •

The Universal Rarity Scale Revisited

IN THIS COLUMN in the June 1992 issue of The Numismatist (p. 790), I proposed the implementation of a new system for describing coin rarity—the Universal Rarity Scale. My ideas inspired several readers to make suggestions, which I shall mention in due course. First, a synopsis of what I wrote in June.

In brief, I noted that “How rare is it?” is one of the most-asked questions in our hobby. I may be a bit presumptuous in stating that until now, the answers were not completely satisfactory. Such adjectives and phrases as “common,” “scarce,” “rare,” “very rare” and “extremely rare” are apt to vary in meaning from one user to another. Moreover, what is rare in one series may be common in another.

The Universal Rarity Scale (URS)

is mathematically sound in its progression and relationship among its divisions, and is applicable to any series. Stated simply, it is a geometric progression of numbers, with each category containing about twice as many members as the preceding category.

Rarity 1	= 1 known, unique
R-2	= 2 known
R-3	= 3 or 4 known
R-4	= 5 to 8 known
R-5	= 9 to 16 known
R-6	= 17 to 32 known
R-7	= 33 to 64 known
R-8	= 65 to 128 known
R-9	= 129 to 256 known
R-10	= 257 to 512 known
R-11	= 513 to 1,024 known
R-12	= 1,025 to 2,048 known
R-13	= 2,049 to 4,096 known
R-14	= 4,097 to 8,192 known
R-15	= 8,193 to 16,384 known
R-16	= 16,385 to 32,768 known
R-17	= 32,769 to 65,536 known
R-18	= 65,537 to 131,072 known
R-19	= 131,073 to 262,144 known
R-20	= 262,145 to 524,288 known

An 1879-O Morgan dollar, with its mintage of 2,887,000, would receive a rating of URS-23 on the Universal Rarity Scale.

R-21 = 524,289 to 1,048,576 known
 R-22 = 1,048,577 to 2,097,152 known
 R-23 = 2,097,153 to 4,194,304 known
 R-24 = 4,194,305 to 8,388,608 known
 ... and so on

The suggestion was first made to me by John Kroon, and seconded by J. Alan Bricker, that the URS could be simplified and made easier to use by rounding off the numbers in the higher categories. For example, R-16 could be 16,000 to 31,999, R-17 could be 32,000 to 64,999, and so forth. This also has the advantage of an easy starting number in the higher ranges. I like this idea, and in my forthcoming book, Silver Dollars and Trade Dollars of the United States: A Complete Encyclopedia, I will use the revised scale below.

At the recent ANA convention in Orlando, Bill Fivaz and J.T. Stanton, authors of the best-selling Cherrypickers' Guide to Rare Die Varieties, told me that they like the Universal Rarity Scale so much that they plan to employ it in the 3rd edition of their book. Rather than use R-1, R-2, etc., which might confuse it with the Sheldon or other scales, I suggest that numismatic writers, catalogers and others use URS-1, URS-2, etc., as follows:

URS-0 = None known to exist
 URS-1 = 1 known, unique
 URS-2 = 2 known
 URS-3 = 3 or 4 known
 URS-4 = 5 to 8 known
 URS-5 = 9 to 16 known
 URS-6 = 17 to 32 known
 URS-7 = 33 to 64 known
 URS-8 = 65 to 124 known
 URS-9 = 125 to 249 known
 URS-10 = 250 to 499 known
 URS-11 = 500 to 999 known

URS-12 = 1,000 to 1,999 known
 URS-13 = 2,000 to 3,999 known
 URS-14 = 4,000 to 7,999 known
 URS-15 = 8,000 to 15,999 known
 URS-16 = 16,000 to 31,999 known
 URS-17 = 32,000 to 64,999 known
 URS-18 = 65,000 to 124,999 known
 URS-19 = 125,000 to 249,999 known
 URS-20 = 250,000 to 499,999 known
 URS-21 = 500,000 to 999,999 known
 URS-22 = 1,000,000 to 1,999,999 known
 URS-23 = 2,000,000 to 3,999,999 known
 URS-24 = 4,000,000 to 7,999,999 known
 . . . and so on

For the numismatist, the Universal Rarity Scale permits accuracy not hitherto known. For example, an 1884 Trade dollar (10 known) is URS-5, while an 1885 (5 known) is URS-4. The 1870-S half dime, 1870-S $3 and 1873-CC "no arrows" dime, each of which is unique, are each URS-1. A mint-state 1873-CC quarter without arrows, of which three are known, is URS-3 for the grade. The 1873-S Seated Liberty dollar, of which none is known to exist, is URS-0.

The same scale also can be used to evaluate an issue of which hundreds of thousands of coins are known. We know that the General Services Administration disposed of 675,000 mint-state 1884-CC dollars during the 1970s, and, in addition, probably some 100,000 or more mint-state 1884-CC dollars were released before that time. Under the Universal Rarity Scale, the mint-state 1884-CC can be described as URS-21 (500,000 to 999,999 known). A 1989-S proof set (of which 3,005,776 were sold) is URS-23.

Using the Universal Rarity Scale, collectors of modern proof sets, silver dollars, Hard Times tokens, large cents and other series can speak the same language. I invite anyone and everyone to use the Universal Rarity Scale; no acknowledgment or credit line is necessary.

Comments from Readers

The following excerpts are taken from comments I received concerning the URS proposal.

J. Alan Bricker wrote, "I have applied the same concept embodied in your Universal Rarity Scale during the course of my own work for several years now, and I strongly endorse this type of system. Inverting the classical rarity scales so that 'R-1' becomes the highest degree of rarity permits the generation of an open-ended scale amenable to all practical degrees of rarity we might encounter.

"I have looked for ways to 'round out' my scale in the past, and have previously concluded that a reasonable point at which to [do so] might be at the R-7 level (64-127); this could be rounded to 64-125, and the scale could continue as follows: 126-250, 251-500, and so on . . . I look forward to seeing widespread adoption of a standard, open-ended rarity scale with general applicability during future years."

Comments Weimar White, "Just a short note to mention that I saw your Universal Rarity Scale article in the recent issue of The Numismatist. Hopefully collectors will use it. Perhaps it should also appear in The Rare Coin Review and the scale itself be a part of all your auction catalogs."

He continued, "I would like to see the scale printed up on a card so that it could be used as a bookmark, etc.

Anyway, I am glad your URS is in print, and I plan to use it at the first opportunity."

Richard August wrote to remind me that 20 or 30 years ago he and I had discussed a rarity scale using a mathematical progression, so here's a belated credit line to you, Dick! (By the way, Dick August is a math teacher.)

Russell A. Augustin of NumisTech Publications was the first of several people to inform me that they had been thinking along parallel lines, but by using a Fibonacci mathematical scale. First delineated in a 13th-century table, the scale employs an additive system: 1, 2, 1 + 2 = 3, 2 + 3 = 5, 3 + 5 = 8, 5 + 8 = 13, and so on. R-1 would represent 1 known; R-2 would represent 3; R-3 would stand for 3 or 4 known; R-4, 5 to 7 known; R-5, 8 to 12, etc. A comparison of the Fibonacci progression to the URS, shows that the former advances less quickly. Further information about this scale is given in Augustin's publication, the Coin Price Activity Report.

Of course, other mathematical progressions could be devised as well. Particularly interesting to me is that I have heard from at least 10 to 15 people who strongly agree with the Universal Rarity Scale concept and who, in several instances, had devised related scales of their own.

Perhaps this is an idea whose time has come!

Capturing the True Columbus

ABOUT 20 COUNTRIES, including the United States and Canada, claim some association with Christopher Columbus or pay homage to the explorer by including on their paper money an engraving of the discovery scene, his landing in the New World or, as will be presented here, a portrait of the gentleman from Genoa. There is no evidence that Columbus ever sat for a portrait, consequently we cannot be certain of his absolute likeness. Ten different portraits seem to have served as the basis for most of those we find on the paper money discussed here.

Christopher Columbus was born in either Quezzi or Quinto (the latter was called "Zena" by contemporary residents) near Genoa in 1451. During the mid 15th century, sailors from all over the Mediterranean and beyond spoke unfamiliar languages as they gathered in the Genoese harbor. As a young boy, Columbus surely gazed out from the waterfront and wondered about the faraway homelands of these sailors who spoke such strange words. "Genoa," wrote U.S. Admiral Samuel Eliot Morison, "was certainly a place to give any active lad a hankering for sea adventure."

The eyes of the portrait that appears on the backs of many bank notes from El Salvador have a questioning, "I wonder what's out there?" quality. This portrait, apparently based on one by Antonio del Rincon and on a medallion by Julio Romano, appears on bank notes prepared by the United States Bank Note Corporation (USBNC) and two English security-printing firms, Thomas De La Rue (TDLR) and Waterlow & Sons (W & S).

Alfred Jones (1819-1900) engraved a mature profile of Columbus for the American Bank Note Company (ABNCo). Francisco Asis Lopez adapted the image for a medal struck for the Centennial of Calderon. Scholars agree that this portrait most likely resembles the Italian sailor who changed the way people viewed the world in the late 15th century.

The Jones engraving can be found on paper money from Costa Rica (P[ick] numbers 131-150A and 165). The same model was used when TDLR prepared notes denominated 2 colones (P195) and 10 colones (P179). An engraver at W & S also used the same model for a 50 colones (P207) for Costa Rica.

Above Costa Rica along the west coast of Central America, just north of Nicaragua, is El Salvador, not to be confused with San Salvador, a tiny island east of Cuba. (It was San Salvador where Columbus is said to have kissed the white sand on the beach before he raised his eyes to heaven upon landing there in 1492.) The Jones-Lopez-ABNCo portrait was selected for at least two notes issued by the Banco Central in El Salvador: 1 colon (P69) and 5 colones (P74). The Banco Occidental requested this portrait for a series of 1- to 500-colon notes (PS191-199).

One of the most popular images of Christopher Columbus on paper money is based on a painting by Francesco Mazzola Parmigianino (1503-60). This version is found on the 1850 Brazil 100-mil reis (PS421) prepared in Philadelphia by Toppan, Carpenter & Company (TC & C). About 10 years later, a 25-mil reis (PS251) was made by ABNCo. Since TC & C was one of the companies that joined to form ABNCo in 1858, it is possible that the same engraved portrait was used. A 10-peso note from Argentina (PS1763), dated 1883, bears the same ABNCo portrait.

At least three notes from the Domin-

ican Republic bear this portrait: a 25-cent note (PS101) and two 1-peso notes (PS103 and PS121). (In Pick's reference, this portrait is identified as Ferdinand Magellan.)

The fourth country to ask ABNCo to place the Parmigianino portrait on its paper money was Nicaragua. The notes comprise the 1 peso (P38) and the 1 to 100 pesos (P28-34).

A 10-shilling note, part of a private issue by Geo. W. Gordon & Company of Kingston, Jamaica, bears the Parmigianino portrait. The notes from this issue were prepared by Draper, Walsh & Company of Philadelphia.

In addition, the same portrait served as the model for United States obsolete bank notes from 10 states:

The Ansonia Bank $5, The Bank of America $5 and the Tolland County Bank $10 (Connecticut)

Bank of Augusta $1 and The Exchange Bank $10 (Georgia)

New Orleans Canal & Banking Company $10 (Louisiana)

York City. A 1-peso note (P5) from Puerto Rico has a small portrait that could have been based on the same as the preceding.

The Versailles portrait of Columbus, possibly painted by a disciple of John de Bruges or Jan van Eyck and closely resembling the one painted by Sebastian del Piombo, was used as a model for a 25 colones (PS113) from El Salvador, a $5 (P11) from Puerto Rico, a 10 lire (PS212-213) from Italy, and a 100 pesos (PS214) from Uruguay. On each the image is reversed; Columbus' brooding countenance was altered by an ABNCo engraver to make him appear younger and happier.

Additional notes from Uruguay, a 10 and a 100 pesos (PS242 and PS2) and a 100 pesos (PS147) from the Dominican Republic seem to be based on the Théodore de Bry engraving. Each note was prepared by W & S. Although there are some differences, the portrait on the back of the 50 colones (P115) from El Salvador was undoubtedly based on the same engraving.

The original DeBry engraving shows Columbus with a number of blemishes on his face. This portrait was made prior to 1585. Although Columbus died in 1506 or 1508, a portrait with such realistic characteristics suggests that the artist had personal knowledge of, if not direct contact with, the famed explorer.

The sixth portrait type that resembles examples on bank notes was painted by Charles Legrand and can be found in the Naval Museum in Madrid. Guadeloupe, where Columbus landed on his second voyage in 1493, issued a 5-franc note (P21) with this portrait. And, as you might guess, Italy honored its native son by placing this image on two 5,000-lira notes (P72 and P76). A 2-peso note (PS132) from the Dominican Republic, a 100-peseta note (P118) from Spain, and 10- and 100-peso notes (PS242 and PS245) from Uruguay carry portraits that resemble the one by Legrand.

According to Arlie Slabaugh, a statue by Jeronimo Sunel, based on the Legrand portrait, was the inspiration for the Columbian Exposition half dollar design by Charles E. Barber. The identical profile appears on an Exposition souvenir ticket and on a seal that accompanies all souvenir cards issued by American Bank Note Commemoratives during this anniversary year.

dated December 1871 has an engraved portrait that appeared in Cesar Cantu's Universal History. What seems to be an engraving of the Yñaz portrait of Columbus can be seen on Bolivia's 50 bolivianos (PS235).

The Muñoz portrait, based on a painting by Mariano Maella, was not painted until the late 18th or early 19th century. An extremely small oval engraving of this portrait can be seen—if you look closely—on some U.S. obsolete bank notes, including:

The Commercial Bank of Florida $2

The Augusta Insurance & Banking Company $100 and The Merchants and Planters Bank $100 (Georgia)

The New Jersey Manufacturing & Banking Company $1 to $20 notes (the image is reversed on the $5, $10 and $20)

Alfred Jones is credited with designing this mature portrait of Columbus for the American Bank Note Company. The vignette appeared on a 100-colon note issued by the Republic of Costa Rica.

The Mississippi & Alabama Rail Road Company $5

In this 500th anniversary year of Columbus' first voyage, a $1 note was issued by the Bahamas. The bust of Columbus is based on a portrait by Ridolfo Ghirlandaio.

Finally, four portraits of Columbus cannot be traced to a particular model: the 1 and 100 pesetas (P127 and P64) from Spain; the 1 to 100 colones (PS211-224) from El Salvador; and a 10 bolivianos (PS133) from Bolivia.

Scholars maintain that Christopher Columbus surpassed all his contemporaries in the art of navigation. Nevertheless, as the variety of portraits on bank notes demonstrate, we cannot be absolutely certain of the appearance of the man we honor in 1992. •

Collectors and Dealers Can Now Get Every U.S. Coin They Submit Graded and Slabbed...even if the coin has a problem!

"Introducing The New Improved PCI Certified Coin Capsules®"

Destined to make every coin you own (even the problem ones) More Valuable Than Ever Before!

To get every coin you own in one of these clear, attractive, museum-quality encasements (slab) that is ultrasonically sealed.

RED LABEL FOR
"PROBLEM" COINS

Problem Coin Certified Capsule

JULY 1992

Beginning Today: When you submit coins...every one of them will be graded and encapsulated. Never before has any grading service offered such extensive attention to your coins. Coins without any problems will continue to be graded and holdered with the premium "old-familiar" GREEN INSERT LABEL. Coins with problems will now be graded and holdered with the new certified RED INSERT LABEL. These will be graded with the problem described and printed below the grade. Collectors and dealers can now get their coins graded, certified and slabbed even if the coin has a problem.

You make the choice between other grading services and PCI. And when you do please consider the following reasons that make the difference:

- (1). PCI only charges $7.50 per coin (plus postage, etc.) to grade, authenticate, encapsulate and to process your order regardless of its value. Compare this to $26 or $22 or even $12!
- (2). Anyone may submit coins to PCI at the same low rates. The 3 other major grading services have formed exclusive dealer networks...thereby restricting who may get coins graded. Why do you think they charge so much? It's obviously money in the dealers pocket not yours! No longer do you have to go through an "in-crowd" to get consistently graded coins. It's your private business!
- (3). Every genuine dated coin you now submit (except plugged, held, altered or undistinguishable) will be encapsulated in either the GREEN LABEL or RED LABEL slab. Collectors know that coins in slabs are generally worth more and now you can get in on the profits. PCI does reserve the right to refuse to encapsulate any coin for any reason it feels would be detrimental to the numismatic industry.

6 DAY EXPRESS SERVICE SLAB SUBMITTAL FORM

Coins will be shipped on or before the 6th working day after we receive them and will be sent U.S. Registered Mail.

Colorado's Kingdom in the Sky

THERE IS A certain charm about kingdoms—the mere thought of one conjures visions of pomp and circumstance, elegantly robed royalty, and high-reaching, turreted castles. The kingdom of Bull Hill was without such illusion. The pomp and circumstance was labor strife, the royalty was drawn from the ranks of red-necked miners, and their turreted castles were mere clap-board shacks.

But, the kingdom of Bull Hill did exist, high in the mountain gold fields of Colorado. It had such accoutrements of nationhood as its own Declaration of Independence, boundaries to patrol, even passports to issue. As a free entity, Bull Hill failed to savor a day of peace, and the kingdom's independence was very short-lived.

For the numismatist, Bull Hill left few tangible reminders. Although a distinctive currency was discussed, it is doubtful that a single specimen of its planned scrip was ever printed. Passports and a copy of the Declaration of Independence remain, as do bitter memories. Collectors have to console themselves with the fact that their legacy is to be found in our nation's gold coinage issued near the end of the century past. The story of Bull Hill is the tale of the men who labored underground so that men above could become rich and the nation could have gold for its coins.

Although no one talked secession at the time, the seeds of the idea to establish an independent kingdom within the boundaries of Colorado were planted the first days of the year 1894. Mine owners hit upon a plan to extract more gold from the earth at no additional cost to them. They simply informed their miners that, henceforth, the workday would be 10 hours long, not 8, and their daily pay—the munificent sum of $3—would remain the same. "Take it or leave it," they said. There was a depression on, and there were other men who would be glad to take their places.

The mine owners refused any sort of discussion. The miners retaliated. They formed a union, associating themselves with the Western Miners Federation, and promptly went on strike. With some sympathy, but little support from outside, the miners of Bull Hill proclaimed their territory independent of outside jurisdiction.

The response to their actions was little different to a similar proclamation issued over a century earlier. And, as the previous overlords had done, the mine operators hired an army of mercenaries to enforce their dictates. Instead of Hessians, the mining companies recruited from the dregs of Denver. The "officers" were said to come from the ranks of former police officers of that city, men who had made names for themselves on their own blotters—assault, extortion and robbery. It was a motley army.

Fired with booze and the bravado of "[teaching] the red necks a lesson," the army boarded a train from Denver to Cripple Creek, where they camped. The men of Bull Hill were not about to retreat. An invasion of Bull Hill was inevitable, and it began one morning in early May 1894. The army boarded a special train consisting of an engine, two flatcars and a caboose. They advanced toward Victor, four miles away.

As they approached the Strong Mine, midway to their destination, the sound of a huge explosion reverberated through the mountains. Debris, not soft bullets, rained down upon the men on the flatcars. The engineer, more sympathetic to the miners' cause than to the mine owners, threw his throttle into reverse and sped back.

However, the estranged miners felt he was not retreating fast enough. They set a flatcar loaded with dynamite loose on the steep downgrade. Fortunately for the retreating army, the speeding car derailed on the first sharp curve. The first casualties from the Battle of Bull Hill were recorded—three goats and one milk cow. But the battle was far from over. It was to last for several weeks.

With independence came the obligatory price of freedom: taxes. The miners assessed themselves the sum of $15 per month. The funds went to support a field kitchen to feed the newly unemployed miners and their families. Local merchants, fearful that company stores might be next on the owner's agenda, contributed supplies. Altman, a little mining camp northwest of Victor, was named the capital of the kingdom. A fort was built above the camp and armed with a fake cannon. Real or not, the cannon could be lethal—it was designed to catapult dynamite into the ranks of the enemy.

Kingdoms must have kings. The crown of Bull Hill went to John Calderwood, the organizer sent by the Western Miners Federation to help the strikers. Nations must have armies, and Bull Hill was no exception. Command was shared by West Point dropout Junius Johnson and Jack Smith. The latter was a miner of sorts—he was a highgrader of local ore.

The battles of the spring of '94 made newspaper headlines across the country. President Grover Cleveland and Governor Davis Waite were drawn into the fray, which soon developed into a stalemate.

On June 7, the mine owners decided to bring the situation to a head. Their army was ordered into battle. Advancing on Altman, they planned to camp about two miles from the capital. Sensing no activity among the miners, the army trooped into Bull Hill. They fell for the oldest trap ever set for invaders. Bull Hill defenders had merely hidden themselves. The air soon filled with crackly gunfire. The mine owners' army once again retreated. Before either side could resume battle, the state militia marched in and forced each side to sit at the bargaining table.

The mine owners softened their stand. The 8-hour day would return. Pay per day would stay the same. The concession they demanded of the miners was that all involved in the uprising would stand trial. The strikers surrendered on this demand, and a Treaty of Peace was signed on June 10, 1894.

Of the more than 300 miners indicted, only the two who had blown up the Strong Mine were convicted. Even King John was acquitted. Commanders Johnson and Smith also were found not guilty, but fate had other plans. Johnson died during the Spanish-American War, and Smith was killed in a gunfight in Altman.

The fort above the capital of the kingdom, along with its fake cannon, succumbed to the wood-burning stoves of town residents. Altman as a town and Bull Hill as a kingdom almost disappeared from the scene. For a while, the story of the miners was relegated to a few dusty pages of history. The town surrendered to its ghosts.

Activity returned with the turn of another century. The tailings the miners dug out by hand now are being reworked, not by underpaid, overworked men, but by the modern expedient of cyanide heap leaching. The need for gold remains the same. It becomes part of the supply of newly mined gold required by Congress to be purchased for the striking of the American Eagle gold bullion coins. •

How Much Is Too Much?

I RECENTLY WAS asked to comment on the worst rip-off I have heard of in the past five years. That called for some thought.

There have been many occasions of promoters touting coins as a solid investment and persuading the uninformed to gamble large sums on future market growth. Others have not only represented coins as an investment, but also have sold overpriced and overgraded material that will probably never be worth the original cost, no matter how high coin prices go.

These despicable business tactics have done much to destroy public confidence in coin investing, and have even had a negative effect on traditional coin buying as a hobby. No one can continue to forgive sellers who charge outrageous prices, especially for coins that show very little possibility of ever being worth their original cost. The curious part of this situation is that it is up to the buyer to resist paying prices that are obviously higher than market conditions dictate. We can't always blame the sellers for charging too much, particularly when informed buyers show no restraint in purchasing those overpriced coins.

Establishing reasonable prices is a two-way street. If you think uncirculated Morgan dollars still are overpriced in today's market, you don't have to purchase any until they drop a little lower. If, after careful study, you think they just can't go much lower, then this is the time to do your buying. Knowing where the market has been and where it is likely to go is the key to successful buying if you care about protecting your investment. Dealers can't sell their merchandise if customers don't buy. Never forget that the whole market is based on supply and demand.

But, I digress. The question was,

"What is the worst offense of the past five years?" I think it has to do with overcharging—to such a degree that it has impacted the entire hobby. My pick may offend some readers, and I hasten to say that this is my personal belief and not an "official" ANA position. In my opinion the absolute worst offender in recent years has been the United States government, with its high-priced commemoratives and sets.

The government sees collectors as a captive audience that will pay any price for its contrived products. These abuses have grown each year until now we are expected to pay an incredible $37 for a proof set that consists not of coins that are in ordinary use, but of non-circulating silver issues that bear no relation to our national money. These coins have a face value of 91 cents and an intrinsic value of about $2.50. Does anyone really think these are super-quality examples of our country's coinage? That is what proofs are supposed to be. Why would anyone think this aberrant product is worth $37?

Few serious collectors believe these sets are worth the asking price. They don't think special packaging adds much to their value, and they don't care to pay even the original asking price for such coins in the secondary market. As a consequence, people who have purchased U.S. Mint products over the past five years or so have seen them drop in value by about 50 percent.

Collectors should be concerned about anyone, even the government, thinking they are not smart enough to see through a scheme designed to play on their desire to purchase each new issue of their national coinage. We no longer have any control over what kind of coins are put into these sets, what designs are used, what unnatural metal they are struck from, or what elaborate packaging scheme is implemented to increase the price. The one thing that has yet to be tried to entice buyers is limiting quantities of these coins.

The situation with commemorative coins is even worse. We not only have to pay ever-increasing prices, but we also have no say in what events are commemorated, how many different issues are produced or who gets the money from the surcharges. The most offensive part of all this, in my opinion, is the way that history is re-thought, producing some illogical commemorative dates. Recent examples are the 37th anniversary of the Korean conflict or the 48th anniversary of the end of World War II.

It's time for collectors to speak up and be heard. I am very much against any kind of boycott of Mint products. That is not the American way of doing things. Besides, we all have fought too hard to get new coins and special issues to add to our collections. No, boycotting these products is not the way to bring attention to our plight. We must all concentrate on making the government aware of how it is hurting the future of our hobby.

Stamp collectors are favored with a never-ending variety of colorful and interesting issues, all priced at face value. What's more, they are promoted in national newspaper and television advertisements. That's the way to increase public interest in a hobby. Why is it that with coins the government seems to do everything possible to discourage anyone from getting started? If we continue to take this without complaining, both the hobby and the government programs will end up losers.

If you are as unhappy with this situation as I am, make your feelings known. Go ahead and purchase all of the latest coins if you wish, but include a letter with your order telling the Mint what you think is wrong with the program. Tell government officials that you think collector coins are overpriced; that designs need to be changed on our circulating coinage; that too many commemorative coins are issued each year; or that you want proof coins to be representative of regular-issue pieces, not something artificial made of silver (or whatever else they may think of next year). Anything short of this action will disqualify you from being able to complain about being short-changed when you buy these coins.

Speaking of mint sets, have you seen the new privately packaged sets offered by Sears? They look just like some of the government's plastic-encased sets, but contain whatever coins Sears wants to put in them. Most people, even experienced collectors would confuse these privately packaged sets with the real thing.

A test mailing, offering sets of uncirculated coins, was sent out earlier this year to 22 million Sears credit card holders. The mailing offered 25 years of "United States Mint Coin Sets 1967-1991." The price for the 25 sets, comprising a total of 122 uncirculated coins, is $249.99 plus $7.99 for shipping and handling.

The average cost of $10.32 per set is not outrageous for true uncirculated coins, but reports already in claim that some of the coins are less than perfect uncirculated. That is not unheard of, even with real government sets. In the 1980s some of those coins were harshly cleaned before being packaged at the Mint. Still, one should expect to get uncirculated coins in something called a "Mint Set." It will be interesting to see if this program catches on. It could create new interest in the hobby or just add to the confusion. Only time will tell. •

In 1905 President Theodore Roosevelt asked noted sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens, to redesign our nation's coinage based on high relief designs of the ancient Greeks. Saint-Gaudens created what many consider the most beautiful and artistic coin in the history of U.S. coinage—the 1907, Roman Numerals, high relief $20.00 gold.

The coinage of the ancient Greeks that inspired Saint-Gaudens, as well as the subsequent coinage of the Roman and Byzantine empires comprise one of the most popular collecting pastimes known throughout the world.

Collecting this classical coinage is both affordable and educational. Classical Numismatic Group is in its 16th year of serving the collector in this fascinating field. If you, like Roosevelt and Saint-Gaudens, are inspired by ancient coinage, then let us introduce you to its pleasures with our fully illustrated and detailed catalogues.

■ According to author Frank S. Robinson, "We can't ordinarily choose how we spend most of our time, but hobby activity is certainly at least one thing we choose to do; in fact, it is the thing we jump at doing with a lift in our hearts." His book Confessions of a Numismatic Fanatic: How to Get the Most Out of Coin Collecting (ANA Library Cat. No. AA58.R6R6) is "the story of how one person got involved with coins, and how the hobby not only took root but grew from a tiny shoot into a great tree with a multitude of branches." The story is his own, and in its telling he covers the role of grade and condition, cherry-picking, numismatic literature, how coins and errors are made, aesthetics and ethics, and finally, sharing the joys of numismatics.

The beginner's guide is aimed at experienced collectors as well, emphasizing the hobby's pleasures. Confessions of a Numismatic Fanatic (hardcover only) is available for $19.95 plus $1.65 shipping ($2.50 to foreign addresses) from Clío's Cabinet, Box 123, Lodi, WI 53555, or directly from the author, Frank S. Ferdinand and Isabella

Particularly noteworthy is that Ferdinand and Isabella did not introduce any novel ideas or create a totally new monetary system to bring about the needed stabilization of the coinage. As the economic historian Jaime Vicens Vives stated, "[W]hat they did was to impose an honest and honorable administration on the minting and distribution of money."*

Born and raised in Salina, Kansas, Loren Hazelwood is the son of ANA life member Floyd Hazelwood, who was a collector and dealer for more than 30 years. As such, the author grew up surrounded by coins and collectors and is no stranger to the world of numismatics. He obtained a bachelor's degree in chemistry from the University of Kansas in 1967 and a master's degree in business administration from the University of Akron (Ohio) in 1982. Hazelwood currently serves as vice president of operations for Isolab, Inc., in Akron.

Bright Idea

A number of years ago, the Chili (New York) Coin Club invited the county historian to speak at one of its meetings. He talked about how the area was settled, sharing many colorful anecdotes. Although his personal experience with coins was limited to cashing his paycheck, he helped the club introduce the hobby to the 20 or so people who came to hear him, and we gained valuable publicity and several new members.

LESTER MERKIN—LM 341

The numismatic world was saddened on July 26 when Lester Merkin, age 70, passed away from complications resulting from surgery. Lester was at once a gentleman and a prince—a professional numismatist who brightened the hobby for anyone with whom he came in contact.

I first met Lester in the early 1950s while attending a coin auction. A collector at the time—dealing in coins would come later—he took from his pocket a particularly nice Carson City Seated Liberty half dollar and asked if I would like to see it. I admired it and asked its cost, for as a dealer I was quite accustomed to being offered items for sale.

"I just wanted to show it to you . . . it is in my personal collection," Lester commented. "I know you like nice coins, and I thought you would enjoy seeing it—it is one of the better ones in existence, I believe." As I recall, it was an 1873-CC "without arrows" in gem uncirculated condition, quite possibly not only "one of the better," but the best. However, Lester, being of a modest nature, did not trade in superlatives.

In 1958 Lester decided to become a coin dealer. From then until ill health dictated a curtailment of his activities, he was one of the most familiar personages on the convention scene, in the auction field, and in New York City, where he maintained a walk-in coin shop. Under his name, a number of highly important auctions were held, notably sales of the collections of Louis Helfenstein in 1964, with additional coins consigned in 1966, and Mr. and Mrs. A.J. Ostheimer (1968). With Walter Breen's research and excellent photography accompanying a fine selection of outstanding numismatic material, each catalog became a highly sought reference work.

Lester was a consummate friend to his clients, not just because they were spending money—some spent very little—but because he truly enjoyed people. Time and time again, I saw Lester advising someone about forming a collection of large cents or bidding in auctions. He never lost patience and was always willing to help.

Many rarities passed through his hands, including a specimen of one of three 1861 original Confederate States of America half dollars; the famous

King of Siam proof set (containing an 1804 silver dollar); and an entire galaxy of sparkling pieces, from half cents to double eagles. One of his favorite coins—although certainly not one of the most expensive—was a 1922 high-relief Peace dollar. He was especially proud of it, for it was a variety many professionals were not acquainted with.

In the 1970s Lester called and said he would like to introduce me to the people at The Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. They were planning to sell portions of the Garrett Collection of United States coins. As I traveled by train with him to Baltimore, our conversation was not about numismatics, but rather the personal side of his life.

Today, Lester is remembered as a professional numismatist and connoisseur, but for much of his life he was a professional musician, playing saxophone with such greats as Paul Whiteman and Gene Krupa. He enjoyed his wife, Selma, and in addition to being married to her for many years, considered her his best friend—a relationship aspired to by many, but achieved by few. At one time, Selma, who survives him, was a familiar face at auctions and in his store—always ready to relate one adventure or another. I remember her telling me about going on some sort of tramp steamer as a passenger—she could have gone first class on the finest luxury liner available, but enjoyed the challenge of doing something different.

For many, numismatics is just coins, but for Lester, numismatics was people first and coins second. In reflection, that is the way it should be. I certainly will remember Lester for the coins he handled, but I will remember him more for the person he was.

—Q. David Bowers

ANA Congratulates Long-Standing Members

The American Numismatic Association is proud to recognize members who have achieved 25, 40, 50, 60 or 75 years of cumulative membership in 1992. Individual members of 25 years are awarded silver medals engraved with their name, membership number and anniversary year; 40-year members are given pins; 50-year members receive medals struck in gold and pins; and members of 60 years are presented medals struck in electrum. Clubs achieving 25, 50 or 75 years are presented special, mounted certificates bearing the club's name and initial year of membership.

In addition, the ANA would like to congratulate the American Numismatic Society, which celebrates its 75th year of ANA membership in 1992.

rather hard to locate, and the 1-, 5-, 15-, 20-, 40-, 60- and 75-cent issues are not always available. Some of the fractional cent issues, such as 6¼ and 12½, are seldom found. The $6, $7, $8 and $9 denominations are pricey and only easily obtainable from one issuer. So take a look and decide if the challenge of collecting scarce denominations is for you.

Collecting bank notes from a particular span of time can be very rewarding. You can choose notes issued during the Civil War, or those released during the Panics of 1837 or 1857. All areas of date collecting have their scarce and common issues. Even in the obsolete series, many notes have yet to be discovered. Any period you choose will offer a rewarding challenge.

You will find that printers almost always left their mark or name on the notes they produced. Notes that you choose for their artistic appeal might represent only one or two printers. These can easily become the basis for a collection. In most cases, the imprinter was active for only a few years.

Notes with specific subjects are widely collected. Railroad issues were quite common in the 1830s to '50s as the rails reached westward. Steam train vignettes, together with the name of the issuing authority, make a very interesting study in railroad history.

The subject most sought at the recent American Bank Note Company sale of archival material was Santa Claus. Whenever a lot came up that contained St. Nicholas notes, at least 6 to 10 hands were in the air. Many subjects offer far less competition; clipper ships, steamboats, agriculture, livestock and Indians are just a few types of vignettes available on bank notes.

However, obsolete notes from a specific location are still the predominant focus of many collections. Notes from south of the Mason-Dixon line or the Confederate States of America are just two areas of interest. If you come from a large Eastern city, you might find 100 to 200 issuers from that area. Such a selection could hold your interest for many years. Collecting notes from your own state also ranks very high with location collectors.

Collecting obsolete paper money can be a lighthearted pursuit with no serious side effects. Just buy those specimens that are attractive to you and form a collection as time, money and interest dictate. On the other side of the coin are collectors who are very serious, recording all the historical sidelights of each note they acquire. Either way, the hobby offers many hours of pleasure.

When we collect paper money, our ultimate goal is to build a collection worthy of display, maybe even good enough to win an award. Any collection is worth displaying because it allows you to demonstrate what interests you. Your exhibit can be made up of almost any combination of pieces, but the judges give points based on the ability of the viewer to read the title of your exhibit, look at all the items displayed, and see how and why they fit into the exhibit.

I once saw a prize pig at the fair and wondered exactly what the blue ribbon meant. Was it the best pig in the county? "Well," said the judge, "this pig represents the 4-H project that showed the best gain, best presentation and handling. This lad put his talents and knowledge into helping the hog gain the most weight on a balanced diet. We consider the costs, the final weight and the market price. With what the boy had to work with, this hog is the champion."

For example, if you choose "Odd Denomination Notes" as your exhibit title, you can't include the standard $1, $5 and $10 notes that most collectors are familiar with. If your title is simply "Notes Issued in Denominations Less Than $1," you might include 3 or 23 notes, and it could be an award-winning display.

You must provide a suitable amount of information and present it in an attractive manner. Awards are not given for quantity or even quality. Numismatic information can garner a maximum of 35 points, with presentation earning 30 points, completeness, 15; condition, 10; and rarity, 10.

Preparing an exhibit can be likened to a college teaching assistant getting ready to lecture for the first time. The lecture has to be put together paragraph by paragraph, fact by fact. It has to be rehearsed, delivered, revised and delivered again. Most teaching assistants know that at least one student will spot a misstatement or inaccuracy in a lecture. Even if they don't, the professor will be sure to step in. Although he may not stop

Even Soap Can Be Harmful

SOAP AND SLIDEMARKS are the topics of this month's "Collector's Edge." Remember to address your comments to me in care of The Numismatist, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, Fax 719/634-4085. Be sure to include a business-size, self-addressed stamped envelope if you wish to receive a personal reply.

Q. I would never clean an uncirculated or proof coin, [but] what about cleaning dirt off a circulated coin with plain soap and water?

—R.P., California

A. If the coin's surfaces are heavily corroded or otherwise damaged, soap and water are not likely to cause any additional damage, and may help to improve the coin's appearance. However, coins that are lightly corroded only in a spot or two, or just darkly toned, should be left alone.

Although the surfaces of circulated coins generally are less likely to be damaged by cleaning than the surfaces of uncirculated pieces, circulated coins still are susceptible to cleaning problems like hairlines, impaired luster (especially Extremely Fine and About Uncirculated pieces) and unnatural color.

If you must clean a circulated coin with soap and water, I recommend using a liberal amount of soap and, if necessary, rubbing the coin very gently with your fingers to loosen debris. Make sure you wash all the soap off the coin, and either allow it to air-dry or pat it dry with a very soft cloth.

Always experiment with a similar, low-value specimen before attempting to clean a more valuable piece; consult an experienced numismatist if you have any doubts. Remember, for every coin that has been improved by cleaning, at least a dozen others have been harmed!

Soap may seem to be an innocuous substance, but it can interact with a coin's surface and disturb its luster. Soap, like ammonia, is a base, although much more mild. It will remove toning and a small amount of surface metal, just as an ammonia solution will, but it does not act as quickly.

Lastly, you imply that it is never a good idea to clean an uncirculated or proof coin. Although this usually is good advice, it is possible to improve some uncirculated or proof coins with certain cleaning methods (using a commercial coin or jewelry "dip" to remove very unsightly toning, for example). However, even more pitfalls exist for cleaning uncirculated and proof pieces, so be doubly cautious.

Q. I would appreciate your advice on the best type of plastic for storing coins and where I can obtain sheets or slides of this material. I have several albums with sliding plastic sleeves; unfortunately, one album must have the wrong kind of plastic, because most of the coins in it have darkened. I would like to replace the slides.

—J.F., Oregon

A. Without seeing your album and coins, I have no way of knowing for sure, but it sounds as if the cardboard

Actual Size: 23.5mm

Actual Size: 28.5mm

All but the most abrasive cleaning probably will not harm this heavily corroded 1793 half cent (top). Attempts to clean the corroded area around the TED of UNITED on the reverse of this 1803 large cent (bottom) would further damage the coin, making it even less desirable.

in your album may be the culprit, not the plastic sleeves. In most of the albums I know of that use such sleeves, they are made of inert material, although there are exceptions. If the toning began or is darker near the edges of your coins, I'd bet your problems were caused by the cardboard.

A word of caution: although many plastic album sleeves are chemically inert, that does not mean they never harm coins! As you insert and remove the coins, the sleeves impart "slide marks," or small scratches, to the coins' high points. I know of no chemically inert slide that is absolutely safe in this regard, so be careful. •

The Role of Mintmarks in Authentication

WHEN VERIFYING A coin's authenticity, the American Numismatic Association Authentication Bureau (ANAAB) carefully studies its diagnostics. Coinage dies share much in common with fingerprints in that no two are the same. The style and position of dates, lettering and mintmarks vary, as do die polish and defects. This month's column will focus on some diagnostics of mintmarks.

Mintmark punches are produced by hand engraving the end of a length of pencil-shaped steel. Until recently, mintmarks were punched into the finished dies at the Philadelphia Mint prior to the dies' shipment to the branch mints. Since this process is subject to human error, the position and depth of the mintmarks vary. In some cases, errors occur and the mintmark must be repunched.

Mintmarks tend to exhibit the same style for a specific length of time. For example, consider the "S" mintmark on the 1909-S VDB cent. The punch that created this mintmark was used for all San Francisco production dies from 1909 to 1917, with the exception of the 1909-S Indian Head cent, all Barber coinage and the Panama-Pacific commemorative half dollar. This period includes many key-date coins.

Evidence of a correct mintmark style helps to certify that a questionable coin is unaltered because added mintmarks virtually never replicate the exact style and diagnostics of the original. (However, a counterfeit struck from transfer dies can faithfully replicate a mintmark.)

The position of the mintmark can vary, as four obverse dies are known to have struck the 1909-S VDB cent (see the May 1983 issue of The Numismatist, p. 958). Any variation in the style or position of the mintmark points to an alteration. The same is true for the Denver Mint punch that was used from 1911 to 1917. Since the 1916-D dime and 1914-D cent employ the same style of mintmark, it is important to study it further. Careful examination shows that the serifs are distinct and square and that the opening of the "D" is triangular.

There are four different mintmark positions for the 1916-D dime (see the January 1982 issue of The Numismatist, p. 80). The first position is single-punched and high; position four is single-punched and low; and positions two and three are double-punched midway between positions one and four.

Positions three and four show a notch at the upper left portion of the mintmark, a result of the double punching. I have not seen an added mintmark displaying this diagnostic. The mintmarks in positions one and four are higher in relief than those in positions two and three.

The 1914-D cent also is a popular candidate for alteration. It has the same mintmark style as the 1916-D dime, but because a larger number of dies were used, mintmark position is not considered an important diagnostic. An interesting quirk of the 1914-D cent is that the mintmark often rests in a light depression. This diagnostic applies to some other coins as well, including the 1932-D and -S quarters and 1934-S dollars. In some cases, such as the 1918/7-D nickel, only one reverse die was used, so the mintmark position and style are constant.

Authenticators rely heavily on mintmark style and position. Characteristics such as double punching, "machine doubling," and mintmarks in depressions support a coin's authenticity. •

The mintmark on a genuine 1909-S VDB cent (left) features parallel serifs (with a notch in the right serif) and a die chip in the upper loop. The incorrect style of the "S" mintmark on a 1909 VDB cent (right) identifies the coin as an alteration.

- Cannot determine valuations of items—values must be supplied by the submitter.
- Fee schedule: $23 per coin for specimens valued up to $4,999 each. For items valued at $5,000 or more the cost is $40 per specimen. Genuine and counterfeit determinations will be at full charge. Sufficient return postage must be included with each submission. Postage only will be billed if no decision is reached.
- Provides reference attributions if possible.
- Uses its network of numismatic experts on a consulting basis for those items requiring additional examination and opinions.

- The ANA fee structure is predicated in part on accurate valuation of coins for insurance purposes. Overvaluation, even within the stated limits, raises costs and may result in a rate increase.
- Payment is due in full with order. Coins will not be processed until payment is received.

PHOTO CERTIFICATE

- A photo certificate will be issued for newly authenticated items and for reexamination and transfer of previously authenticated items submitted to ANACS prior to August 1, 1990.

AUCTION INSIGHTS BY BOB MERRILL

Buried Treasure

In 1988 we conducted two of our most memorable sales ever—the October Long Beach and December Dallas auctions. Each sale was anchored by a collection of gold coins that had been seized by the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and U.S. Marshall's Service from a group of Colorado drug smugglers.

In the late 1970s, two businessmen with master's degrees in business administration failed at their employment and decided to enter the business of illegal importation of drugs. They gathered their life savings of approximately $10,000 and traveled to South America to purchase cocaine. Upon returning to the United States, the cocaine was distributed at a profit, netting some three times their original investment.

Within two years, their business had expanded to four partners, and they were importing hundreds of pounds of cocaine. Each partner became responsible for a different task, such as acquisition of investors, importation, distribution, and laundering of the drug proceeds. Their expanding business now enabled them to use private airplanes to import their product.

In the early 1980s, the DEA seized approximately 100 pounds of cocaine from a pilot employed by the partners. This resulted in an investigation by DEA agents, the Internal Revenue Service and the Orange County (California) Sheriff's Department. The four partners and over fifty of their associates were identified.

The partners had invested their money in land, interest-bearing accounts and the usual, but one of the partners had an interest in gold coins. Consequently, he invested a sum well into seven figures in all types of U.S. gold. Not just common material, but early eagles, Stellas and the like.

Once the partners and associates became aware of the investigation, they literally buried the gold coins in various locations. (The coins were placed inside Tupperware™ containers.) Just as the pirates of old drew maps, so did the partners. When the authorities executed their search warrants, the maps were discovered. One indicated a burial site by "a white cliff with a crack," located just outside the hamlet of Crawford, Nebraska. Approximately $1,500,000 worth of gold coins lay buried at this location for five years.

All of the individuals identified by the authorities were convicted and found guilty of conspiracy to conduct the affairs of an enterprise through organized crime and income tax evasion. All were incarcerated in a federal penitentiary; all the gold was recovered (supposedly) by the U.S. government.

Interestingly, the DEA is one of the few government agencies that is able to return money to the U.S. Treasury. Since 1986, the value of its seizures has exceeded its budget. Some of the more exotic confiscated properties include helicopters, yachts, Tiffany lamps and Arabian stallions. The properties are sold at public auction and the money placed in the national treasury.

Next month I'll look at another burial spot, some of the better coins in the Long Beach and Dallas sales, and the revenues that were generated. •

Bob Merrill has served as auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Previously, he taught history at a Dallas junior college. Heritage, selected as the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary convention sales through 1995, has conducted more ANA auctions since 1980 than all other firms combined.

CURATOR'S CORNER

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

An Early Islamic Coin

Our featured item this month is an outstanding example of early Islamic coinage. A silver dirham from the mint of Wasit in Iraq, it was struck during the reign of the Umayyad Caliph Hisham in A.D. 739/40 (A.H. 122). Part of a large bequest of the late Howard Bailey, this piece owes its importance to both its status as a representative of one of the world's most historically significant issues and its spectacular state of preservation. Such pieces are not uncommon and frequently are seen in exceptional condition. However, as an educational tool, it is a welcome addition to the Museum cabinet.

Coinage of Islam's first 74 years consisted of contemporary Persian and Roman coins and more or less direct imitations of these struck by conquering Arabs. In 696 and 698, completely new, "reformed" designs were introduced for gold and silver coinages by 'Abd-al-Malik ibn Marwan, the great successor (caliph) to Mohammed's leadership. In accordance with the teaching of the Koran, these new coins bore exclusively epigraphical designs.

'Abd-al-Malik and his son, Hisham, were members of the Umayyad family of the prophet Mohammed's tribe, the Quraysh. They had become dominant through control and support in Syria, and moved the capital to Damascus from Kufa in Iraq, where it had been established by 'Ali, Mohammed's son-in-law and fourth successor.

Kufa and Basra, its rival in southern Iraq, were garrison cities and centers of great cultural importance during this period, but also were focal points of unrest. In 703 (A.H. 84) a new city was founded between these two by 'Abd-al-Malik's powerful viceroy, al-Hajjaj ibn Yusuf, with a garrison of loyal Syrian troops. This town, called Wasit (the one "in the middle"), immediately claimed administrative significance and became the site of the most prolific mint under the Umayyads. Its products became known wherever the great trade routes of the medieval Islamic world extended.

The Museum's coin displays all the typical features of the Umayyad reformed dirhams: a central inscription on the obverse ("There is no God except Allah, He is alone, there is no partner to Him") and a marginal legend reading, "In the name of Allah was struck this dirham at Wasit in the year two and twenty and one hundred." The central reverse inscription ("Allah is One, Allah is eternal, He did not beget and He was not begotten, nor is there to equal Him a single one") is surrounded by a marginal legend reading, "Mohammed is the messenger of Allah, he was sent with the guidance and a religion of the truth in order to cause it to be bright over all other religion, though the polytheists may dislike." The margins are outlined by ornamental circles, and the borders are decorated with five annulets, with those on the obverse being quite prominent.

The central obverse inscription is the first part of the Kalima, the profession of the faith of Islam. The obverse marginal legend is called the bismillab (its first word in Arabic)—the most important aspect of such a coin, numismatically speaking—which constitutes a standard date/mint formula. The central reverse inscription is a quotation from the 112th Sura of the Koran, a passage generally referred to as the "Umayyad Symbol" because of its ubiquity on the Umayyad coinage, and the reverse marginal legend is also a Koranic quotation, drawn from Sura 9 (Verse 33), referred to as the "Second Symbol." The annulet patterns are believed to correspond to the administrations of specific provincial governors as superintendents of the coinage.

The principal reference work on Umayyad coins is A Catalogue of the Mubammadan Coins in the British Museum, Volume 2, by John Walker (ANA Library Cat. No. KA50.B7.V.2), in which a specimen corresponding to the ANA's is cataloged as No. 573.

The ANA Museum's mint-state Wasit silver dirham of Umayyad Caliph Hisham ibn 'Abd-al-Malik (A.D. 724-43) weighs 2.962g and has a diameter of 25.3mm. It displays an engraver's error extending from the waw of Wasit across the kaf of the word sharik (third line down in the center of the obverse). As on the British Museum's example, there is a central point on the reverse immediately below the mim of the word lam in the second line. (ANA Museum Accession No. 1992.16.52)

The Internal Revenue Service has formally determined that the American Numismatic Association is a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Therefore, all donations—both of cash and of material with established "fair market value"—qualify as charitable contributions for income tax purposes. Additional information can be obtained from the Museum of the American Numismatic Association, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279.

the assistant in mid-sentence, he will point out areas that could be improved. A numismatic exhibit judge will do the same thing, if asked, after the awards have been given.

If you prepare your display with that in mind, you become the lecturer and the viewers become your class. This may help you produce a better exhibit and perhaps walk away with a first-place award.

Thirty years ago it was not unusual to see displays with typed or handwritten cards about the exhibited material. This still may be the first step in exhibiting at the club level, and if the information presented is complete, you may not lose too many points. However, many exhibitors today make use of computer-generated titles and attractive graphic layouts that help ensure high scores in the presentation category.

You will note that limiting the title also tends to keep your exhibit manageable. By making your display as complete as possible, you can pick up nearly all of the 15 points in that category. ANA rules state that only exhibits that receive 65 points or more are eligible for third-place awards. If you pick up 15 points for completeness and 55 to 60 percent of the points in the other categories, you may qualify for at least a third-place award.

I should also mention that limits usually are imposed on the size of exhibits. ANA rules allow up to nine cases for the paper money category, depending on the size of the case. I have always thought that three cases are very workable in terms of keeping within the scope of the title yet having enough room to develop the theme you have chosen. You should strive to give the viewing public enough information to instruct and interest without overwhelming.

Finally, I can't stress too much the enjoyment you receive from exhibiting. Preparing an exhibit will help you learn so much about your collection. The numismatic information you assemble enriches you and those who view your display. If you choose to collect any of the many varieties of broken bank notes, scrip or obsolete paper money, take the time to share your collection. The reward will be yours as well as ours. •

A long-time devotee of numismatics, Dean Oakes began his collecting career one cold winter in Northern Iowa in 1949, when he made his own "penny board" out of a cardboard box. He is the author of IOWA OBSOLETE NOTES AND SCRIP, and with co-author John Hickman he compiled THE STANDARD CATALOG OF NATIONAL BANK NOTES. Oakes currently serves as treasurer of both the Society of Paper Money Collectors and the Iowa Historical Society.

Site-Unseen Dealing

THE ORLANDO AREA has Disney World, Sea World, even Gator World. But the best public entertainment during the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention was free: a nearly four-hour amusement ride taken by the Board of Governors.

The Board's August 15 meeting included marathon presentations by 11 cities determined to host ANA conventions in the years 2000 and 2001. Who says the hobby is dying? Obviously, some people believe we'll be around for at least another nine years.

Representatives of the cities were given 20 minutes each for their dog-and-pony shows. To convince the ANA to select their community as a future convention site, they showed colorful slides and played G-rated videos; there was even a song and dance.

Attracting tourists is big business. Even a modest ANA convention generates millions of dollars, and that's just the hotel bar bills. So, the convention bureaus launch a promotional onslaught to rival the D-Day invasion of Normandy. At the end of all that show-and-tell, COINage Senior Editor Ed Reiter noted that the only major cities not represented were Beirut and Sarajevo.

Weeks prior to the site-selection meeting, the ANA Board began receiving numerous, glossy brochures. At least seven acres of Amazonian rain forest were required to produce the paper for the several tons of literature. But wait, there's more.

Once in Orlando, messages and modest gifts were discreetly dispatched to the Governors' hotel rooms. One evening, a small but exceptionally heavy box with a note from the nice folks in Fort Worth was waiting for me. Inside was a handsome bronze paperweight, weighing at least 3,000 pounds, molded into the image of a Texas longhorn steer.

Additional souvenirs were distributed by each convention bureau representative at the August 15 meeting: more paperweights, T-shirts, commemorative tokens, medals and pewter plates, and other nominal trinkets, such as an occasional kilo of platinum.

Surprisingly, not one Governor suggested dipping into the ANA budget to pay the freight bills to ship the stuff home. Then again, when packed carefully, it eventually did fit into the new Corvettes thoughtfully supplied by one chamber of commerce.

Emphasizing its reputation as an entertainment center, the Orlando Convention and Visitors Bureau hired four appropriately costumed a cappella singers to perform songs of the 1950s and '60s. (Just as the Orlando sales pitch was starting, ANA Governor Grover Criswell walked out, protesting Florida's new sales tax on numismatic items. He did, however, return in time to eat one of the tasty ice cream bars distributed by the Orlando delegation.)

Each board member also received a zany hat. Governor Anthony Swiatek got a safari helmet, President Ed Rochette was given Mickey Mouse ears, and I got a Woody Woodpecker hat, although I balked at the rousing encouragement to actually wear it.

There's no decision yet on future ANA convention sites, but I keep thinking about that Texas longhorn steer paperweight. It's a symbolic reminder that there's some heavy bull involved in site-unseen dealing. • Announcing In Celebration of the Americas.

The First Quincentenary Commemorative Coins in United States Mint History.

Spain, 1492. The war has cut off Europe from Constantinople and all routes east for nearly 40 years. Royal treasuries are depleted because there is no export trade. The world is flat. Navigation of the seas is very limited by fear of sailing over the "edge."

But, someone dares to search for another sea route. Conventional wisdom cautions against sailing west, "too near the edge." In daring to sail west however, that someone makes a historic discovery – the discovery of the Americas. Now you can celebrate that remarkable voyage with the Columbus Quincentenary Coins.

The Columbus Quincentenary Coins

This daring historical voyage and the courageous man who led it are featured on three spectacular commemorative coins produced and sold by the United States Mint. The Five Dollar Gold Coin obverse, designed by James Ferrell, bears a portrait of Columbus facing a map of the New World. The reverse, designed by Thomas Rogers, shows the Crest of the Admiral of the Oceans, an honor bestowed on Columbus.

The One Dollar Silver Coin features on its obverse a design by John Mercanti – a full-figure rendering of Columbus beside a globe, with his ships above. Thomas Rogers' reverse design is a dramatic split image of the Santa Maria and the U.S. Space Shuttle Discovery, symbolizing discovery then and now.

The obverse design of the Half Dollar Clad Coin is a scene of Columbus landing in the New World. His three ships are depicted on the reverse. Both designs are the work of James Ferrell.

FROM COLLECTOR TO INVESTOR

The most trusted grading service available

For many of today's numismatists coin collecting started at a young age with the discovery of a few 'old' nickles or pennies.

As we grew older the excitement of finding, trading and collecting coins stayed with us.

Eventually, the hobby became a business and the business grew into an industry.

At NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA (NGC), we are committed to advancing numismatics—both as a hobby and as a business.

THE CREDIBLE SOURCE FOR SUPERIOR, CONSISTENT COIN GRADING SERVICES.

Now dealers, collectors, and investors can be confident that they will receive consistent coin grading time after time.

The NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, with over 500 charter and associate members, provides the industry with an independent, credible, and superior coin grading service.

Letting an Asset Slip from Corporate Memory

AN EDITOR ONCE wrote: "Coin Week, which was observed in many cities and towns throughout the United States, was such a success, measured by the extent and variety of exhibits and the interest shown by the exhibitors and the public, that the observance of such a week annually has been suggested."

The author was Frank Duffield, editor of The Numismatist. The year was 1924, and the annual event that he called for went on to become National Coin Week. Duffield's vision for the observance more than fulfilled his highest expectations. Unfortunately, interest has waned in recent years.

The "first" coin week was held in 1924, from February 9 to 16. Later, in deference to the uncertainties of winter weather, the date for the event was changed to the third full week of April.

Today, if we could even equal the efforts expended on the inaugural Coin Week, we, too, would be bragging "great success." For that first Coin Week, the New York Numismatic Club arranged for exhibits to be placed at the Chatham and Phoenix National Bank and most of its 12 branches. The Rochester (New York) Numismatic Association, Springfield (Massachusetts) Coin Club, Pittsburgh Numismatic Society and the Pacific Coast was in charge of local exhibits, as was R.C. Hartman in Hawthorne, New Jersey.

The Chicago Coin Club created displays for branch libraries throughout the city and suburbs, as well as in many local high schools. In St. Louis lectures were scheduled for presentation at Washington University, while in Reno, Nevada, C.O. Herz conducted a membership drive. There were store-front showings in Los Angeles and Cleveland. One of the leading dealer firms of the day, Guttag Brothers of New York City, published a pamphlet titled "Coin Collecting" for free distribution during Coin Week.

My presidential counterpart of 68 years ago, Moritz Wormser, commented, "Coin Week has proved a huge success. One gratifying response to the exhibitions has been a manifestation among progressive banks of an entirely new interest in the science of coins and money."

Sometime in the interim, scrapbooks were introduced as the participants' way of registering their events promoting National Coin Week. A system of judging the event was devised, and winning scrapbooks were placed on exhibit at the anniversary conventions.

And what scrapbooks they were. In 1968 for example, I remember the scrapbook judging that took place at the newly opened ANA headquarters in Colorado Springs. Ralph Cleaver, a former ANA governor, chaired National Coin Week that year. The theme chosen was "History under Glass." Serving with him on his committee was Al Overton, well-known numismatic scholar, author and dealer. Cleaver's other committee judges included Clem Bailey, Krause Publications; Dick Bowman, president of the Colorado-Wyoming Numismatic Association; Dick Anderson, Colorado Springs Board of Education; and Clark S. Yowell, author.

More than 100 scrapbooks were judged. The most impressive was that of Alaska's Totem Coin Club. It had to be crated and shipped via truck, too heavy and too large for the U.S. Mail. Its 12-square-foot cover was adorned with a hand-carved totem pole! No less impressive was the Midwest Numismatic Association's entry covered with hand-inlaid wood. Entries were not limited to clubs alone; scores of individuals vied for recognition as well.

While the official time frame for National Coin Week measured but seven days of the April calendar, it was then a year-long event. A page for the program was reserved for almost every issue of The Numismatist. Members shared in the experience of preparation, display and reporting.

We lament the passing of an era of good fellowship, the demise of the coin club, the decreasing Association membership and the declining interest in our particular avocation. We, the ANA, may have unwittingly contributed to these circumstances by allowing the true meaning of National Coin Week to fade from corporate memory. •

Revitalizing the Hobby

"... our hobby needs a boost, and we, as members of the ANA, are in a position to do it."

—Thomas A. Dowd
ANA Member

IT'S NO SECRET that numismatics isn't attracting large numbers of new collectors anymore. A lot of theories have been postulated to explain the hobby's declining attraction. Some blame has been placed on the emphasis on investment during the '80s, but I'm not convinced that this is a problem. Investing has always been a big part of numismatics. Most collectors consider themselves part investor. Even for kids it's a big part of the fun. Sportscard collectors are obsessive speculators, and their youth-oriented hobby is booming.

The disappearance of coin dealers also has been suggested as a cause of the hobby's atrophy. This situation certainly hasn't helped the hobby, but this is more a symptom of the problem than a cause. Dealers didn't leave the coin collectors—the coin collectors left the dealers. Don't expect to see more dealers until the hobby is back and booming. But can the hobby rebound without them? I'm certain it can. It is the enthusiasm of the collectors, not the number of dealers, that determines the health of the hobby.

It's probably true that attention and money being spent on sportscards today used to be spent on coins, but again this is a symptom and not a cause. The sportscard hobby grew because it developed and maintains a vitality numismatics allowed to slip away. But how did this happen?

I believe the crux of the problem is revealed when the numismatist asks himself, "What got me interested in this hobby in the first place?" When I ask myself this question, I recall my childhood in the late '60s. I remember the treasure hunt, searching my change for silver, Buffalo nickels and early Wheat cents. When friends and relatives learned I was interested in coins, I would often be the happy recipient of a jar of obsolete coins that had been tucked away in a closet somewhere. I remember the excitement I felt. This is what got me hooked. I have to wonder: Does this or can this happen anymore?

I don't believe that searching one's pocket change is as fruitful an endeavor as it used to be. Today's pocket change is essentially barren. Obsolete and silver coins have been completely fished out. All that remains are the tired, old, modern issues stamped out by the billions on worthless metals. An occasional Wheat cent or early Jefferson nickel is the best one can hope for.

That's not the only problem. I also feel that the gold and silver rush in the early '80s contributed to our hobby's dilemma. A lot of the "junk silver" and obsolete coins people had put away came out and went to the dealers (instead of hobbyists) for tidy profits. The net result of this phenomena is fewer collectable coins in the hands of the general public, leading to decreased interest in coins among the same.

This is not the atmosphere in which our hobby once flourished. If our hobby is to regain its former vitality, the situations I've outlined above must be turned around. We must reintroduce the spontaneous, natural joy of collecting.

To correct this state of affairs, I suggest that members of the ANA begin to return silver and obsolete American coins to circulation. Let's re-seed the field and throw the little ones back. Maybe some youngster will discover the odd nickel with an Indian's head on it. Let him take it home and ask his parents what it is. Let's give people a reason to look at their change again.

Perhaps once a year, say the week after the ANA convention, each ANA member could pledge to return $2 to $5 in circulated, but collectable, coins to public use. It could be billed as an "event" and given publicity. People would discover the coins in their change and start asking questions. New collectors would sprout up. Retired collectors might rekindle their interest.

I realize that my proposal is contrary to the nature of the collector. We are the ones smart enough to have snatched up the coins in the first place. But our hobby needs a boost, and we, as members of the ANA, are in a position to do it. •

What do you think of Mr. Dowd's proposal? Send your comments to "Heads or Tails," THE NUMISMATIST, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, Fax 719/634-4085.

Raise the Standards

Why doesn't the coin collecting public cry out against the erratically excellent and occasionally outrageous American Numismatic Association grading guide? Successive editions, most recently the fourth, have been released to general collector apathy and acquiescence.

Has the ANA's image of professionalism cowed all critics, effectively silencing voices of constructive change? Have the good efforts of the organization in so many areas—numismatic education, library services, young numismatist programs, coin authentication, etc.—been so convincing that a slippage from high standards can be quietly overlooked?

The first two editions of Official ANA Grading Standards for United States Coins were done with line drawings. These drawings were ambiguous, permitting the viewer to interpret the drawings to be whatever standard he or she believed the ANA was upholding (I know that is what I did). Few dreamed that the ANA was endorsing Photograde standards.

Photograde, the first photographic grading guide, was described by Walter Breen, a distinguished research expert, with dismay. Breen wrote in Coins magazine, July 1982:

Photograde was a turn for the worse. It gave a pseudo-scientific "validation" to much lower "commercial" grading standards, fulfilling the get-rich-quick dreams of turkeys motivated by the Unholy Trinity: Dishonesty, greed and unwillingness to waste time learning.

The third edition, the first with photos, was so flawed with misplaced photographs that the actual standards endorsed could not be easily determined. Unfortunately, the new fourth edition reveals that the ANA has been "Photogradized." This is especially true for early U.S. coins dated 1793-1835. What is to be done?

First, the collecting public must know that higher standards exist. They must know, for example, that a "Good" coin of any age and any country should have a full (or nearly full) rim and complete major lettering. Wear over the rim into the lettering creates an About Good, not a Good coin. But this simple concept is nowhere explained by the ANA. Photo after photo shows a coin with wear into the lettering marked "Good."

Secondly, collectors must complain to the ANA, to the hobby press and to their dealers about the present state of grading standards. "Raise the Standards!" must be the battle cry. Only when a concerted effort of dedicated numismatists seriously engages the ANA's attention will there be any hope for change. The political leadership of the organization does not realize that their professional integrity has been undermined by the grading guide's debased standards. Collectors and dealers alike must challenge this sanctioned guide and demand a conceptually based system, starting with a true and honest grade of "Good."

Dick Wagner, ANA 70989

Editor's note: Mr. Wagner's comments were adapted from the May 1992 edition of Tipsico Bulletin, published by the Tipsico Coin Company of North Bend-on-Coos Bay, Oregon.

Whitney Knows How to Pick 'Em

I enjoyed the article in the May issue of The Numismatist entitled "Cherry-picking a Coin Dealer," by Gregory Olin Whitney (p. 683).

I thought the article was especially informative, and I concur with Mr. Whitney wholeheartedly. So much so, that I have requested a copy of the American Numismatic Association's brochure Consumer Alert.

Joseph R. Stack, ANA 156778

Former Detroit Police Officer Attests to Safety of Convention Site

I read Mr. Turcotte's letter in the May issue of The Numismatist ("Member Readies for Detroit Show," p. 593) with considerable dismay. He does a real disservice to the City of Detroit's convention capability.

I am well acquainted with convention realities in Detroit. I retired from the Detroit Police Department in 1988 when I assumed my current duties as Chief of Police in Wausau, Wisconsin.

I am looking forward to entertaining my Wisconsin friends in Detroit in '94 by taking them to Greektown, Bricktown, Rivertown and Mexicantown—all great restaurant districts in the city. They are safe, inexpensive and fun, as only big-city attractions can be. If Mr. Turcotte's Detroiters who "live in the suburbs" aren't aware of these areas, it's their loss.

Yes, like all major urban centers, Detroit has crime problems. They are, as elsewhere, however, more related to drugs and poverty than anything else. A lot of money and energy has gone into developing the waterfront and revitalizing the downtown area. Ample police protection is present in the convention area to assure safe and successful meetings.

The International Association of Chiefs of Police will be returning to Detroit for its second convention there in the past 10 years. I'll be showing off my hometown to the Wisconsin chiefs of police this fall. One of the reasons they're returning is because they had such a great time in 1983.

I'm concerned that a lot of the debate (since opposition seems to come from Florida) is really a smoke screen to relocate closer to home for those Florida folks. While I've got nothing personally against alligators and rattlesnakes, I'm looking forward to seeing the dedicated Michigan collectors get a chance to have an ANA show close to home. I believe the show is for members and not dealers, and the bulk of the whining I've heard seems to come from dealers.

In conclusion, let me offer my services as a Detroit tour guide. I'll be happy to fill folks in on the fun that's available in Detroit. The ANA and the media should feel free to call on me for factual information if this Detroit site debate continues.

A Who's Who of Owls

In the October 1991 issue of The Numismatist, a barn owl was used to illustrate "The Other Side of the Coin" by Edward C. Rochette ("The Unlucky Oysterman of Willapa Bay," p. 1632). The apparent problem is that the text noted a screech owl.

There are two "standard" reference books that ornithologists (at least this one) refer to when questions arise about owls: Life Histories of North American Birds of Prey by Arthur Cleveland Bent, which originally was published by the Smithsonian Institution in 1938; and The Audubon Society Encyclopedia of North American Birds by John K. Terres. The first consists of records and observations, in this case from the late 1880s to the mid 1920s. The second often refers to the first and is much more "modern." Like most encyclopedia entries, the entry on barn owls is quite short—three columns in length.

Both books list alternate names for the barn owl. Screech owl is not listed as one of the alternates. However, there is some evidence that the owl seen and heard by the subject of the piece, John Lyons of Portland, Oregon, was, in fact, a barn owl.

Both books refer to one of the barn owl calls as a "scream." Barn owls often are found nesting in structures such as barns. So, it is not a far leap of imagination that a barn owl could be "perched by the well" or in the structure of the well seen by Mr. Lyons.

It is truly unfortunate that people like Mr. Lyons, and many people even today, consider owls as signs that "portend ill luck." Owls, both barn and screech, are beneficial in that they keep rodent populations in check.

With the advent of bird-watching and field guides, it is unlikely that such a degree of confusion would be possible in this day and age.

Chris Budes, LM 4146

I refer to the April 1992 issue and John Heckard's letter titled "Wise about Owls" (p. 450). Now I'm no ornithologist, but I do enjoy bird watching, and I use Peterson's Field Guide to Birds. If you look at the sections of the book on owls, you can see there is a great difference between a screech owl and a barn owl. I concur with John A. Heckard that the owl pictured in the October 1991 of The Numismatist is a barn owl.

E. Lawrie Rhoads, ANA 130685

John Heckard is correct in pointing out that the owl pictured on page 1633 of the October 1991 issue of The Numismatist is a barn owl. Webster's New Universal Unabridged Dictionary is wrong in stating the barn owl and screech owl are the same.

There are three species of screech owls in the United States (eastern, western and whiskered), and only one species of barn owl. The two kinds are very different. The barn owl lacks ear tufts and is twice the size of a screech owl; the former has a distinct "facial disk" giving it a heart-shaped face. The call of a barn owl is sort of a "screech," but distinctly different from the call of a screech owl. Your illustration is a good likeness of a barn owl.

Navigating with a Faulty Compass

Charles Steib's article, "Different ANACS, Same Standards?" in the May 1992 The Numismatist (p. 636) presents improper and ambiguous data for readers to draw invalid conclusions, as previously noted in the "Letters" section in the June 1992 issue.

Steib asks us to search for reasons why his 67-coin study of coins first graded by ANACS/ANA in the years 1983-88, then by ANACS/Amos Press in 1991, produced 50 coins (75 percent) that were graded differently the second time, and only 17 coins (25 percent) that matched the first grade.

He dismisses "grade inflation" as a cause, then opines that the explanation might be that ANACS is now run as a profit-making business. Rather than guessing, I suggest Mr. Steib consider the evidence gleaned from his own study and elsewhere.

1) To begin, I question the validity of using only 67 coins as a basis of the study. A larger number would be preferred.

2) Not one coin in the study was graded 65/65 by ANACS/ANA. Why is this important? The most important grade, as the object of search by many dealers and investors, was and continues to be MS-65/65. Also, grading controversies over the years have tended to focus on the 65 grade. It has been the "yardstick" grade on which many studies have been based. And, it is the grade that represents the greatest dollar risk for many consumers. Loading the study with coins graded 65/65 might be going overboard, but excluding them entirely is highly improper.

3) Since the intermediate grades of MS-61, -62 and -64 had not yet been adopted by the ANA when most of the 67 coins were graded by ANACS/ANA, is it not fair to assume that a coin that is close to, but not quite the 63/63 grade (today's 62 or 61), as an example, would be accorded the 60/60 grade? Of course it would! Therefore, to claim that ANACS/ANA undergraded coins that it called 60/60 and which were later graded 61 or 62 by ANACS/Amos Press is improper. Same when ANACS/ANA graded a coin 63/63, which was later graded 64 by ANACS/Amos Press.

4) Some coins, too, were graded 60/65 by ANACS/ANA, which were later graded 63 by ANACS/Amos Press. Steib says the grade was raised. I say it is unclear. He is ascribing more precision and interpretation than is warranted.

5) Lastly there is the obvious variant: Several years passed between the two grading services' performances. Fully 41 of the 67 coins (over 60 percent) were graded before the Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) began operations in 1986. Why is this important? Because PCGS helped to unify and codify grading standards in the "mind of the marketplace."

Active collectors and dealers had the opportunity to hone in on a supposedly set standard (PCGS). This allowed market participants, including the ANACS/Amos Press graders in 1991, to develop a much more defined standard with reduced deviations from the "norm." Those of us grading coins before PCGS in 1986 and Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC) in 1987 tended to navigate with a faulty compass without the fixed bearing of the 1991 market's more generally accepted standard.

1992 Mint Set Now Available to Collectors

All six of the Netherlands' circulating coins are included in the 1992 Dutch Mint set, now available from the Mint for $14.50 (CAN$17). This issue continues the series begun in 1987, in which one of the 12 Dutch provinces is featured annually on the six pages of the set's wallet. The subject for 1992 is Zeeland, noted for its conquest of the sea, particularly with the completion of the Oosterschelde flood barrier.

Each coin in the set has the same design—the obverse carries a three-dimensional profile of Queen Beatrix, the reverse bears a geometric pattern indicating the denomination.

Bebees Receive First Lifetime Achievement Award

Dealers by profession, collectors at heart, the recipients of the American Numismatic Association's first Lifetime Achievement Award were announced August 15 at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida. For Adeline Bebee and her late husband, Aubrey, numismatics was more than a business, it was a way of life.

Despite their success in both the hobby and the marketplace, they never lost sight of those who helped them in their early years. They were longtime members of the ANA, organizers and charter members of the Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG), fellows of the American Numismatic Society, and long-standing members of the International Association of Professional Numismatists. Their awards include the ANA Medal of Merit and the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award for Distinguished Service.

Never seeking such honors, Aubrey and Adeline donated their treasures to the ANA Money Museum because it was the "right thing to do for the collectors." While all donations to the ANA are greatly appreciated, some are so unexpected and so overwhelming that it is hard to find the proper words to express gratitude, especially when the donations include a 1913 Liberty Head nickel, a Class III specimen of the 1804 dollar (the "King of American Coins"), the world's foremost collection of U.S. paper money, a spectacular 1854 Kellogg & Co. $20 gold piece, an 8-daler specimen of 17th-century Swedish copper plate money, and numerous examples of primitive mediums of exchange.

The ANA is particularly proud not only of the Bebees' achievements in the field, but also of their outstanding generosity to the ANA and the numismatic world. While it is hard to think of Adeline without Aubrey, the Association is gratified that she continues to uphold the principles that brought the two of them so far. To show its appreciation, the ANA also presented Adeline Bebee with honorary life membership in the Association.

Medals of Merit Recipients Honored at Orlando Show

The 101st Anniversary Convention of the American Numismatic Association honored five individuals on August 15, 1992. The ANA Medal of Merit, presented annually in recognition of numerous years of dedicated service to the Association, was awarded to Elvira Clain-Stefanelli, Paul E. Garland, Frank Gasparro, George D. Hatie and Derek Pobjoy. In addition, the Friedberg family received a Medal of Merit in honor of their long-time commitment to the hobby.

Romanian-born Elvira Clain-Stefanelli fled war-ravaged Europe with her husband and son for New York in 1951. After operating a coin store in the city for five years, her husband joined the staff of the Smithsonian Institution. A year later she joined him as co-curator of the National Numismatic Collections. Their activities at the Smithsonian and joint numismatic writings added much to the knowledge and enjoyment of the hobby over the years. A prolific author in her own right, Elvira Clain-Stefanelli also has

The ANA's Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs, home to the Association's national headquarters, will be held March 11-13, 1993, at the elegantly remodeled Broadmoor Hotel. Reports Convention Director Ruthann Brettell, "Dealers and convention visitors will be very impressed with the facilities. The trading area will remind them more of a plush ballroom than a typical bourse floor."

Convention General Chairman Ken Bressett has named his Colorado Springs committee: Bert Bressett, assistant general chairman; Dottie Lofquist, pre-registration and registration chairman; Allen Nye, security chairman; John Anderson, security assistant; Larry Johnson, exhibit chairman; George Mountford, exhibit assistant; Dick Goudie, housing chairman; James Taylor, education chairman; Marilyn Reback, YN and page chairman; and Max Stucky, patrons chairman.

ANA Educational Services Director James Taylor has scheduled a coin-grading seminar prior to the show. In addition, he urges collectors to take advantage of the proximity of ANA headquarters by visiting the Museum and Resource Center.

The Early Spring Convention will feature an exciting array of non-competitive exhibits vying for the coveted People's Choice Award. Chairman Bressett hopes to institute a special award for the most outstanding exhibit of Western Americana at the show. • served on numerous committees concerning coin and medal design and testified before the U.S. Senate and House banking committees.

Tennessean Paul Garland began collecting coins as a child and followed his love of the hobby into a lifetime profession. During military service in World War II, Garland pursued his interest in foreign currency. After returning home he joined the ANA in 1963 and became a full-time coin dealer in 1964. He is a member and past president of the Tennessee State Numismatic Society and the Blue Ridge Numismatic Association, serving the latter as museum curator. He is a member of the Gadsden Alabama Coin Club, the Alabama Numismatic Society and the South Carolina Numismatic Society. He has been an appraiser for the Alabama Space and Rocket Center and authored the 1983 History of Early Tennessee Banks and Their Issues.

As he enters his ninth decade, Frank Gasparro continues to establish himself as a powerful, yet compassionate, sculptor and artist, and friend to all serious numismatists. Gasparro first achieved prominence in 1959, when, as a member of the Philadelphia Mint staff, his design was selected to replace the reverse of the Lincoln cent for the 150th anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth. In 1964 he designed the reverse of the Kennedy half dollar, and a year later he was appointed chief engraver of the United States Mint. The year the "new" Philadelphia Mint opened to the public, Gasparro created the ANA's 78th Anniversary Convention medal for the Association's celebration in Philadelphia. Recently, he sculpted the ANA's centennial convention medal and the reverse of the Mount Rushmore commemorative dollar.

George D. Hatie joined the ANA in 1948, but it wasn't until the 1960s that he became active in the hobby, attending the first meeting of the Token and Medal Society (TAMS) at the Michigan State Numismatic Society convention in 1960. He served as president of TAMS, as well as Central States Numismatic Society, Michigan State Numismatic Society, Detroit Coin Club, Grosse Pointe Numismatic Society and the Lake Erie Exonumist Society. Hatie served as a board member and on committees of the Society of Paper Money Collectors, Paper Money Collectors of Michigan and the Penn-Ohio Coin Club. He has served the ANA as general counsel, governor, vice president and president. In addi-

EMERGING GIANTS

"Key" coins are once again becoming the focus of Numismatics! The population reports issued by PCGS and NGC have made informed individuals acutely aware of how desirable and undervalued many truly rare and low population coins are when compared to most highly touted "generic" coins. When working with coins of this nature, I believe that it is essential to enlist the help of a specialist. In this way, you can benefit from experience while avoiding the pitfalls.

I have been dealing exclusively in rare date gold coins for over a dozen years. My reputation and knowledge in this field is unsurpassed. I would be pleased to work with you to build your "World Class" collection or investment portfolio.

Please call me today, so we can discuss your needs.

tion, Hatie has participated in nearly all ANA committees, providing strong leadership and earning the Farran Zerbe Memorial Award for Distinguished Service in 1982.

The founder of the Pobjoy Mint and responsible for the production of a truly distinctive tribute to the ANA's centennial, Derek Pobjoy has long been a friend of the Association. The ANA commemorative coin, struck for the Isle of Man in silver and gold, pictures miniature coins that mark some of numismatics' greatest moments. This legal-tender coin is just one of many distinguished issues produced for the vast world of collectors, many unveiled at ANA's anniversary conventions. Pobjoy has faithfully attended the convention for years.

The Friedberg family traces its numismatic beginnings to the New York waterfront in the early years of the 20th century. The late Robert Friedberg collected foreign coins taken in at his father's tailor shop and used the New York Public Library to enhance his numismatic education. He headed the coin division at Gimbel's stamp and coin department, where he met Goldye, a stamp division employee who later became his wife. Together they offered thousands of beginning collectors an eclectic inventory and emphasized the importance of the scholarly side of numismatics. Their numbering system is widely used today to identify gold coins and U.S. paper money.

In the mid 1950s the two Friedbergs and Robert's brother, Jack, founded the Coin & Currency Institute for the publication of numismatic books and the manufacture of coin albums and supplies. They authored two standard references, Paper Money of the United States and Gold Coins of the World, both subsequently revised and republished by Robert's sons, Arthur and Ira, who followed their parents into the family business.

Successful in their own right, Arthur and Ira have maintained the family's integrity and contributions to the hobby. Arthur has worked with the Money & Medals Office of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and has testified before the Senate Banking Committee about Olympic coinage issues. He and Ira manage the North American offices of the Dutch Mint and the Portuguese State Mint. The hobby of numismatics would be substantially poorer without the contributions of this family.

24th Annual Summer Conference Entertains and Instructs

The ANA's 24th Annual Summer Conference, held July 11-17, was the best in recent memory, report both instructors and students. "Everything was just great," says J.T. Stanton, who instructed the "Mint Errors and Varieties" course. "My students made the class a lot of fun."

Kicking off the week of numismatic adventure and scholarship was a special presentation on Saturday evening, July 11, by paper money expert Gene Hessler, who discussed the amazing talents of "Three American Security Engravers." The rest of the week was devoted to intensive study in the numismatic field of the students' choice:

- "Exploring Colorado Numismatics," a road tour guided by Ed Rochette and Adna G. Wilde Jr.
- "Coins of the Ancient World," a Summer Conference favorite instructed by ANA Museum Curator Robert Hoge

Leonard Albrecht, Bill Fivaz and Mary Sauvain instructed an enthusiastic class in the basics of grading U.S. coins.

- "A Numismatic Odyssey," an overview of numismatics offered by Arthur Fitts III
- "Detection of Counterfeit and Altered Coins," led by ANA Authenticator J.P. Martin
- "Early American Coppers," taught by Ken Bressett, Denis Loring and Tett Tettenhorst
- "A Survey of Asian Numismatics"

Ron Hathaway (seated), professor of biology at The Colorado College, demonstrates the use of a scanning electron microscope to students enrolled in J.P. Martin's class, "Detection of Counterfeit and Altered Coins."

Tett Tettenhorst (standing), collector and noted authority on U.S. half cent coinage, joined forces with Ken Bressett and Denis Loring to lead a class on Early American coppers.

Other highlights of the 1992 Summer Conference included evening "bull sessions" about English hammered coinage, numismatic photography, type sets, mintmarks, numismatic errors and varieties, ancient coins, and tips for collectors. The annual ANA book sale was, as always, lively and crowded as students searched for the best buys in numismatic literature.

James Taylor, ANA director of educational services, notes that "more than half of this year's participants had attended previous Summer Conferences. Many of them feel that this is the best thing happening in all of numismatics."

Simek and Medcalf Head List of Award-Winning Authors

Introduced in 1949 and named for the first editor of The Numismatist, Dr. George F. Heath, the Heath Literary Award recognizes outstanding articles published in the Association's official journal.

The winners in this year's competition, based on articles published in 1991, were announced at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, on August 15. Two articles tied for third-place honors: "Mozart and Money" by Clifton and Dorothy Potter, published in the November issue; and "Setting the Standards on the Road to Oz" by Mitch Sanders, which appeared in the July issue. For this distinction, each author received a bronze medal and certificate.

Editor/Publisher Barbara Gregory earned the second-place award—a bronze medal and a $100 cash prize—for "Numismatics on the Silver Screen" in the March issue. The first-place Heath Literary Award—a silver medal and a $250 cash prize—was Sponsored by John J. Ford Jr., the Wayte and Olga Raymond Memorial Literary Award is presented to authors of articles displaying original and comprehensive research in U.S. numismatics. Earning second-place honors were two noteworthy articles: R.W. Julian's "The Half Cent Coinage of 1832-35," published in the December 1991 issue; and Rick Tomaska's "The Minting of Proof and Special Mint Set Coins" in the September 1991 issue. Taking first place was "The Overprinted Notes of World War II." For this, Simek and Medcalf received certificates and a $400 cash prize.

ANA Releases New Grading Video

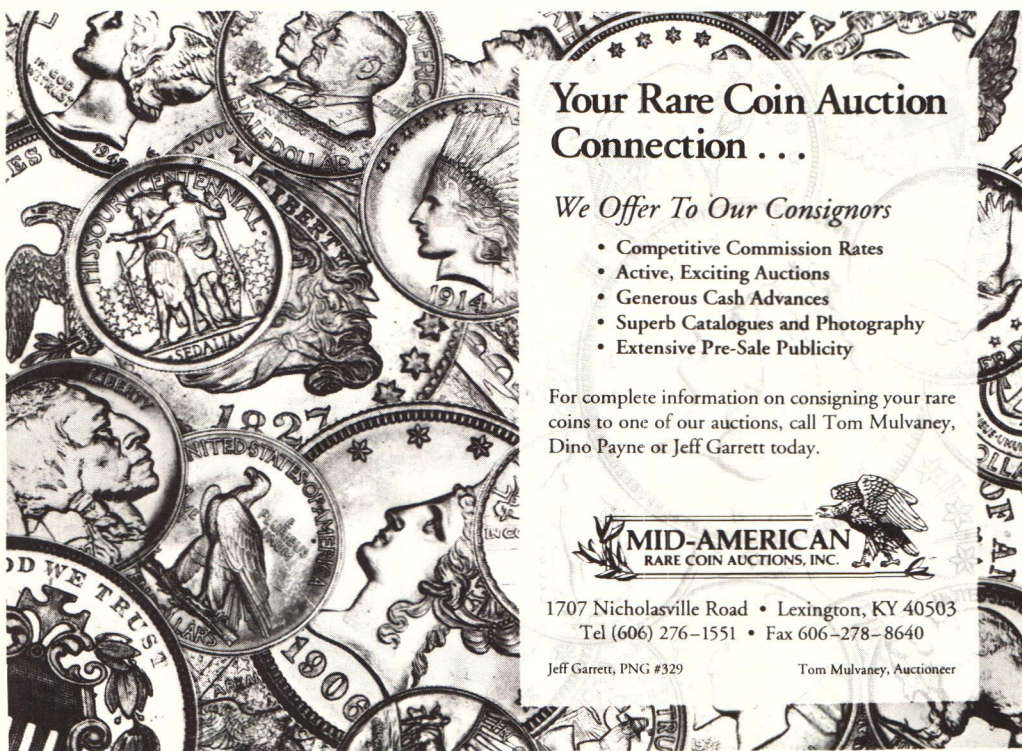

"This is the best discussion of commercial [coin] grading I have ever seen," says ANA Governor and editor of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book") Kenneth Bressett. The ANA Educational Services Department, in connection with Media Resources Corporation, recently released an instructional videotape, entitled "Grading of Mint-State U.S. Coins," featuring ANAAB authenticator J.P. Martin.

According to ANA Educational Services Director James Taylor, "David Lisot's Media Resource Corporation allowed us to use top-quality video equipment and techniques to produce live demonstrations and shots that have never before been shown on any video of this type." Martin, who regularly teaches coin-grading classes at the Association's seminars and summer conferences, leads viewers through the myriad facets of coin grading, offering viewers the opportunity to actually grade coins pictured on the screen and receive immediate feedback.

Some of the topics covered include the history and evolution of coin grading; tools needed to properly grade U.S. coins; "technical" versus "market" aspects of grading; four characteristics of eye appeal—luster, bagmarks, strike and toning; three types of luster; four types of artificial enhancement—whizzing, cleaning, thumbing and frosting; and distinguishing circulated from uncirculated coins.

The videotape is available for $39.95, plus $2 shipping and handling, exclusively from the ANA Money-

Outstanding Government Service Award Presented to Anthony Garrett

At the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, the Association's Outstanding Government Service Award was bestowed on Anthony D. Garrett, deputy master of the British Royal Mint. Since he joined the Mint on January 1, 1988, Garrett has become well known to numismatists and industry leaders throughout North America.

Under Garrett's direction, the British Royal Mint shared in the ANA's centennial celebration, providing a graphic demonstration of the production of hammered coinage, and striking a Medallion of Friendship and Cooperation, both of which served to emphasize the excellent relationship that exists between the Mint and the ANA.

Further evidence of Garrett's efforts to generate attention for numismatics can be seen in his personal North American launch of Britain's 500th Anniversary sovereign in February 1989. In 1990 Garrett welcomed the world's numismatic leaders to the Mint Directors' Conference in London, hosted by the British Royal Mint.

During his past five years as chief executive, the Mint has achieved significant increases in sales and efficiency, while maintaining its world-renowned reputation for superb quality. Under Garrett's direction, major changes have been implemented in the circulating coinage of the United Kingdom. The new, smaller, 5-pence coin was introduced in 1990 and the 10 pence in 1992. In each case, hundreds of millions of new coins had to be produced and distributed by the Royal Mint while the old coins were simultaneously withdrawn from circulation.

The responsibilities of the deputy master are wide and varied, resulting

The Olympic Movement. For 100 years it has been bringing the world together in peaceful competition. Today, there's no better way to commemorate this important centennial anniversary than by owning one or more of an extraordinary series of coins—the first ever sponsored by the International Olympic Committee (IOC).

The Olympic theme has been the favorite of coin collectors since individual countries began issuing Olympic commemorative coins in 1951. Now, for the first time ever, the International Olympic Committee is sponsoring the creation of a series of legal tender coins. It is the only official IOC Centennial Coin Programme.

Each year, for the next five years, two silver coins will be issued by a different national mint—the Canadian, Australian, French, Austrian and Greek mints. For the first time ever, ten proof quality coins issued by five different mints will be uniform in specifications—yet diverse in imagery. Each salutes a different facet of Olympic tradition or an Olympic event. Together they form a unique tribute to the first 100 years of Olympic achievement.

The first coin is issued by the Royal Canadian Mint. The three athletes

The "Coiners" of Cragg Vale

Shortly before the close of the American Revolutionary War, the British government realized that foreign concerns had absorbed so much of its time that domestic affairs, particularly the production of circulating coinage, had suffered. Accordingly, in 1775 the House of Commons resolved to mint new coins and exchange weight-deficient coinage for its full intrinsic value. Most of the current coins had been in circulation so long that their weight and the image they carried had deteriorated. However, Derick McGroarty, a British freelance numismatic writer, states that at least some of the deterioration was deliberate.

According to McGroarty, the threat to the economic system was due in part to "an upsurge of 'coining,' the illegal counterfeiting of officially minted gold and silver coins." He says that money from France and Spain also was legal tender in England at that time, further confusing the public. In essence, many Britons did not know the difference between full- and light-weight coins, and coiners evidently took full advantage of this situation. Counterfeiting was widespread, and McGroarty believes some bankers might have been involved in providing genuine coins to the coiners and circulating the counterfeits they produced.

In the Calderdale and Kirklees districts of West Yorkshire, a small museum in Heptonstall houses a display case devoted to the Cragg Vale coiners. "The exhibits include a set of dies found by Halifax Deputy Chief Constable John Brierley in 1835, concealed in the wall of a house. Alongside is a second set of dies found three years later by a builder working in an old cottage in Cragg Vale," says McGroarty. "In both instances the dies were for counterfeit Portuguese money."

Apparently there was a demand for high-value coinage, even though a silver penny could legitimately be halved or quartered to buy goods. McGroarty explains that a coiner would give 21 shillings for a full guinea. Slivers of gold were carefully snipped from the edge of the coin, which was then hammered and filed for return to circulation. The gold slivers were melted down and poured into a circular mold to make a planchet ready for striking. If dies similar to those in the Heptonstall museum were used, the false coin likely passed as a Portuguese moidore. Although only 22 shillings' worth of gold were used in each counterfeit moidore, they were sold for 27 shillings apiece. Since the coiners often dealt in a hundred guineas at a time, the profit was substantial.

In Britain, the crime of counterfeiting historically has been considered an interference with the administration of government. McGroarty notes that an early English statute cites counterfeiting the king's seal or his gold and silver coinage as a crime against the state amounting to high treason and punishable by death. Debasing coinage by clipping the edges to sell the metal also merited the death penalty.

"The need to conceal the illegal activity added to the difficulty of striking coins," McGroarty says. "The dies in the museum display are about 6 inches long. The two engraved dies for the obverse and reverse were positioned with the metal disc between them in a collar and struck once with a heavy hammer," he continues. This arrangement had the advantage of eliminating the heavy (and very noticeable) bottom anvil a mint needed to produce hammered coins, but it required skill on the part of the counterfeiter. "Too light a blow and the impression was insufficient," explains McGroarty. "Too heavy a strike and either the disc fractured or the die wore too quickly."

McGroarty describes David Hartley, a Cragg Vale coiner known as "King David" who was skilled in applying the right amount of force. He earned his nickname possibly because the impressions on his coins were as good as those hammered in a mint in the name of the king, but more likely in recognition of his leadership of a successful group of coiners.

King David paid the price for his success. In 1770 he stood trial with 24 others at the Spring Assizes in York, was sentenced to death and hanged at Tyburn. A registry entry explains that "David Hartley of Bell House in the township of Erringden, [was] hung by the neck near York for unlawfully stamping and clipping public coin."

Bank Notes and Chilean Idiosyncrasies

"Since the actions of people manifest the singular spirit that characterizes a nation, a hint of our way of life may be seen in the graphic design and use of color on our bank notes," states Raul Donoso Rosso, a paper money collector employed by the University of Chile art department. While some may question the connection, he contends that one "might identify several facets of Chilean idiosyncrasy in our bank notes from 1918, when Chile began to design and print its own paper money, to present times."

According to Donoso Rosso, the limited treatment of portraits, choice of subjects and use of color on the notes prior to 1970 may seem uninspired because the "images, drawn only in pure line, are always placed inside an oval or rectangular medallion, frequently without decoration; primarily political and military figures are depicted (perhaps reflecting the male-predominant social system); and the colors come from a very classical chromatic palette of plain and temperate hues." However, he feels that despite the invariability of design, which he attributes to "a practical, moderate and not exuberant type of mind," the notes reflect the culture's appreciation of classic beauty and quest for "high artistic expression."

"In 1970 new concepts of modern dient tints and modern design made possible by offset printing." He attributes to a "new kind of mind, more flexible and open to new concepts of technology and social changes" the increased creativity and choices of portrait subjects that include other segments of Chilean society, such as those represented by a miner and female poet.

Although the evolution of bank note design in Chile has not always moved forward, Donoso Rosso believes this seeming indecision reflects the cultural and societal struggles between "enthusiasm for life and excessive moderation, individual power of creativity and the force of our idiosyncrasies, and vigorous will for development and respect for old ways."

British Royal Mint Opens Sales Office in Canada

Believing that the potential for British coin sales in Canada is increasing, the British Royal Mint has opened a sales office in Hamilton, Ontario. The Canadian Bureau is run on the Mint's

Speaking for the British Royal Mint, Alan W. Wallace, executive responsible for North America, says "We feel there are a great many Canadians—not only those of British heritage—who will appreciate the opportunity to examine British Royal Mint offerings."

The Mint intends to make products available through direct marketing promotions, such as one established with a major Canadian department store. The "Canada 125" Coin Program

Canada's new circulating coinage has awakened national pride and the public's interest in numismatics.

by Murray Church

The first five nickel 25-cent issues in the "Canada 125" Coin Program. Collectors who purchase the 13-coin set (12 25-cent pieces, 1 dollar coin) will receive it upon the release of the last coin in December 1992.

THIS IS ONE of those tricky multiple-choice questions: "Which of the following are sensitive subjects to discuss—politics, sex, religion or coinage design?" Many a coin collector can capably argue that one, without a doubt, is the last mentioned. They might go on to suggest that other persons less gifted in monetary sensibilities can fight it out to decide if any of the other three even qualify!

Humor aside, what designs appear on our coins is something that Canadians care about, especially when talk of a change is in the air. Just the start of a rumor, like "the Bluenose sailing off the 10-cent piece," is enough to make the phones at the Royal Canadian Mint's Ottawa and Winnipeg facilities ring non-stop.

Knowing that coin design can be a sensitive subject, the Mint is delighted by the overwhelmingly positive public response thus far to this year's changes in Canada's circulating coinage. More specifically, I refer to the series of 12 different 25-cent coins and a special dollar coin being issued to mark Canada's 125th anniversary of Confederation. But the result has not come without a lot of work and some timely, strong, political support.

The Process Gets Under Way

IN LATE 1990 the federal government put out the word to all departments and crown corporations (state-owned enterprises comparable to the U.S. Postal Service): they were to offer ideas that could be implemented to celebrate Canada's 125th birthday in 1992. The call for proposals stated some clear objectives—make them innovative, involve the public as much as possible, and make them especially meaningful to children who are too young to remember the 1967 centennial celebration. The best ideas would also serve to support well-known government directions, such as national unity and environmental protection.

Although the Mint is a crown corporation, it is nevertheless accountable to Parliament through a "minister responsible," in our case, the Honorable

Paul Dick, Minister of Supply and Services. Minister Dick gave the Mint's Master and President, Maurice Lafontaine, active and personal encouragement to develop an idea, and offered his support when any government approvals were needed.

However, time was already running short. The program was to be launched in January 1992, and 12 months were needed to secure designs and begin production. This left only the fall of 1990 to develop and approve a plan. Also looming was the possibility of a Mint labor disruption.

The Idea

IT WOULD HAVE been easy to repeat something that had been done before—less work and less possibility of negative public reaction. The coins issued in 1967, for example, were the result of a commission awarded to well-known Canadian artist Alex Colville. These beautiful issues were very well received and to this day are highly regarded. Obviously, we could have taken a similar course and commissioned an artist to prepare one or more designs. The Mint also considered involving the 750 or so artists who are regularly invited to enter design competitions for our commemorative coins.

But as far as we were concerned, both options were "too safe." Neither would have been innovative, nor would they have produced significant public participation or made more than a marginal contribution to Canada's numismatic heritage. So we turned our thoughts to coming up with a new idea. It had to be radical enough to capture people's imagination and make us grow as an organization, but not so radical as to be impractical.

The bronze-plated nickel $1 coin was highlighted in a series of 30-second television ads aired for a week on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's English and French networks.

We first decided upon the program structure: 12 different 25-cent pieces, each with a unique design and each celebrating one of the 10 provinces and 2 territories. Serving as the centerpiece of the series would be a special commemorative $1 circulating coin. These denominations were chosen because they offered the largest surface area and would show off the designs to best advantage.

In addition, there was an interesting parallel between the "Canada 125" observance and the fact that, in terms of the coins' face value, there was a 1 and many 25s in our coin program. Another planning requirement was to ensure the coherence of the series. Thus, we developed a single design theme, "the beauty of Canada."

The manner of soliciting the designs was much easier said than done. It was to be a totally open, public competition, the only restrictions being that each entrant had to be Canadian and that he/she could submit no more than three designs in the "provincial/territorial" category and only one design in the "Canada" category. Entrants could enter designs for any province or territory, not just for the one in which they resided.

Much thought was given to the manner and sequence of the coins' issuance. Releasing them all at once in January 1992 quickly was ruled out. Given other production requirements, both domestic and foreign, there would not be enough time between the finalization of the designs and the beginning of 1992 to engrave and produce the coins. Other options were discussed, but in the end the correlation between the 12 months of the year and 12 different 25-cent pieces won the day.

The problem then became deciding upon the sequence. Every logical method had significant drawbacks. Should it be based on the order of entry into Confederation? No, four provinces made up the original group in 1867. West to East? No, but why not the other way, or why not North to South? In the end, only a random draw solved this dilemma (see Table 1).

Securing Political Approval

ONCE ALL THESE ideas were incorporated into a document for the Federal Cabinet, Minister Dick began to push the matter forward. But the approval was delayed for several weeks while the government determined the overall framework of the "Canada 125" celebrations. It obviously made no sense to announce a coin program before the larger scheme had been finalized and announced.

These decisions were made in the early days of 1991, and a press conference was held on January 31, at which time two announcements were made: the general plans for "Canada 125" and the first initiative, the "Canada 125" Coin Program. It is not an overstatement to say that without Mr. Dick's efforts, the "Canada 125" Coin Program could not have been implemented.

Inviting the Public

THE MEDIA AND public response to the design competition far exceeded any of our most optimistic expectations. Certainly, some people were interested by the fact that more than $100,000 in prize money was at stake. For each of the 13 design consider-

THE POSITIVE NEWS associated with the contest and the chance to have one's own design immortalized on a Canadian coin were major factors behind the contest's success.

With the help of husband Cal, Rita Swanson displays her winning design for the $1 coin during launch ceremonies on Parliament Hill. "I chose what I believe to be strong national symbols: the flag as our national emblem; children as our future and our source of inspiration; the Parliament buildings as testimony to our history."

ations, a $5,000 prize was awarded for first place, $2,000 for second and $1,000 for third.

The announcement of the competition was accomplished solely through editorial coverage in the print and electronic media generated by a nationwide media tour. The positive news associated with the contest and the chance to have one's own design immortalized on a Canadian coin were major factors behind the contest's success.

The competition ran for only six weeks. Within that time, entrants had to call the Mint on its toll-free line, ask for a design kit, prepare their entries and return them to the Mint. Kits containing design templates and contest rules were mailed to some 27,000 individuals and schools. At the close of the contest on March 15, 1991, we had received a staggering 11,003 entries, with another 2,871 submitted in the "Canada" category! (American collectors can put this in better perspective by considering that if a similar competition had occurred in the United States, there would have been a quarter million inquiries and about 110,000 submissions.)

Judging the Designs

ACCEPTING AN INVITATION from the Mint to join the design selection committee were 10 Canadian men and women from different parts of the country and different walks of life. They came to Ottawa and gave two days of their time to pick the winners. It was a diverse group—a history professor, a photo editor and publisher, a radio journalist, a high school student, several artists and a couple of business people for good measure.

To ensure that all the designs were given a fair chance, and knowing from our past experience that some designs require modification before they can be made into coins, we instructed the judges to base their choices on the merit of the idea and not technical execution. They ended up working well as a group, despite, or perhaps because, they frequently argued passionately for their points of view. After the discussion period, each judge voted by affixing stickers—green (3 points), blue (2 points) or yellow (1 point)—to his/her choices. The total points then were tallied, and the three winners for each of the 13 coins were declared.

An impressive sight: judges and Mint support staff are engulfed by a sea of coin design entries, more than 11,000 in all.

The logistics of the judging provided a major challenge. In downtown Ottawa, the Mint rented a conference hall measuring about 10,000 square feet. In it we set up wooden A-frames from which four rows of about seven designs each were suspended on each side. From any vantage point, the designs for about three provinces and territories could be seen. As soon as the respective designs had been chosen, a platoon of Mint workers descended to remove the entries and replace them with another set.

Data was collected on the origins of the designs, and the figures provided some very pleasant surprises (see Tables 2 and 3). We estimated that some 30 percent of all designs came from children. Though none of these was a first-prize winner, three won either second or third prize. Children's designs were the favorites of the media, who were invited for a behind-the-scenes look. The next day, the front page of the April 11 edition of Canada's leading newspaper, the Globe and Mail, read "[Teenage Mutant Ninja] Turtles on Quarters If Jill Has Her Way."

Production Planning

BASED ON PAST experience, we estimated that at least 30 percent of the total mintage immediately would be taken out of circulation—hoarded, for want of a better word. Average annual consumption of 25-cent pieces had been about 90 million pieces per year, and therefore we decided on a planned production of about 120 million pieces, or 10 million for each of the 12 issues. We also planned on about 10 million pieces for the $1 coin.

For example: 549 designs were received depicting the Province of Newfoundland; 431 entries were received from residents of Newfoundland; Newfoundland's population is 2.2 percent of the national total; and 3.9 percent of all the designs received were submitted by residents of Newfoundland.

Thus far, the work involved in executing (or "authenticating") the selected designs of the coins has been intensive. Our engraving staff helped evolve many of the designs. For example, they corrected the parallel view of the New Brunswick covered bridge design, and provided clear and correct representation of the multi-sided roof structure of Lower Fort Garry on the Manitoba coin.

Placing the coins in the hands of the people and ensuring orderly distribution has required good liaison with armored car companies and the banking industry. The Mint's Vice President of Production, Denis Cudahy, has performed these tasks. A key factor in the program's success is the distinctive packaging and labeling: each 25-cent piece is packed in boxes of 400 ($100), and each box is labeled with the name of the province or territory the coin represents.

Collector Versions

IT HAS ALWAYS been the RCM's prime objective to craft and conduct this undertaking as a circulating coin program and as a gift to the Canadian people in celebration of "Canada 125." However, from the very outset, we wanted to produce collector versions of the coins and make them as special as the concept of the program itself.

Alberta's coin, picturing the distinctive Hoodoos, was released in June, followed by the Prince Edward Island issue in July.

The second-floor rotunda of the Manitoba Legislative Building provided an elegant setting for the introduction of the province's 25-cent coin.

Jack Julien, the RCM's vice president of marketing, and his senior managers suggested that the collector versions be struck in proof only and that the metal used be .925 sterling silver rather than nickel. This has proven to be a popular decision with our customers. (The RCM has been inundated with requests for a less expensive version of the coins and, in response, likely will market a specimen set.) The complete 13-coin set is selling extremely well.

Communications, Launch Events and Promotion

THE CONTEST PORTION of the project was driven strictly by public relations and the media, and we expected that when the actual coins appeared, this level of interest would continue. In the province or territory where the coin was issued, this indeed has been true. At all events, Minister Paul Dick has been on hand, together with the provincial premier or other minister and the winning artist.

But the number of nationwide articles about the program during the launch phase has been fewer than we hoped. As a result, we have taken extra measures to increase public awareness.

For example, we have produced and distributed to banks and other financial institutions a special counter card that informs patrons that the coins have been issued and are available. Another promotion was a week-long series of 30-second television ads on both the French and English networks of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The spots gave special prominence to the Canada $1 coin and reached one out of every four Canadians. It is likely we will do at least one more television ad series before the cam-

However, in generating local and regional publicity, the launch events for the individual coins have proved highly successful. For the unveiling of each 25-cent piece, we advertise the event in the local newspapers, invite the public to come, and give a free coin to all who attend. The most recent launch, in the smallest province, Prince Edward Island, attracted more than 1,000 people.

The introduction of the $1 coin on Parliament Hill drew 3,000 to 4,000 people, who came and exchanged "Loonies" or paper currency for shiny, new, "mint fresh" Canada dollars. It was a mob scene—20,000 coins exchanged in 90 minutes!

Despite all this planning, the program came perilously close to a major delay because of a lengthy strike at the Mint. Union employees were on strike between October 1991 and February 1992, and management staff had to step in to produce coins. This was a difficult time for all concerned, but the first coin for New Brunswick was launched on schedule in January of this year.

Results to Date

AS I WRITE this article, the July launch of the Prince Edward Island coin has just passed. Thus far, mintages have been running near the planned 10 million mark for the 25-cent pieces, but this may not be enough to satisfy the demand. Sixty million or so coins have been issued, yet they are rarely seen in circulation. We suspect that a large portion of the mintage is being snapped up in rolls and put away.

The dollar coin seems to have had an even greater impact. In response to demand, we have increased the planned mintage to 15 million, and we are uncertain whether this will be enough.

Implications for the Future

FOR BOTH THE public and the RCM, this project is turning out to be enjoyable and invigorating. However, because of the enormous amount of work involved, it probably will be a long time before the Mint ever attempts another project of this magnitude. Certainly the program has boosted interest in coin collecting. But there have been some larger and more important implications.

First, the coin program is a very successful and tangible "Canada 125" project that interests virtually all Canadians. Second, it has resulted in the minting of an important series of coins that speaks eloquently of the beauty and majesty of Canada. And perhaps most importantly, it has awakened the public to the potential for increasing national pride simply by changing the designs on circulating coins. ●

The Lambert Collections

COLLECTORS & COLLECTING

A collector for more than five decades, Major Richard Lambert diligently assembled and then sold several collections, but his fascination with the hobby never diminished.

FORT WORTH COIN dealer B. Max Mehl called him "one of the oldest living numismatists." That was in 1914, when Major Richard Lambert, imbued with the military man's zeal for order and precision, had assembled a succession of renowned collections.

Born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1828, Lambert served with distinction in the Mexican and Civil Wars. He also was a well-known Mason, and his hoard of Masonic medals and badges was described as the most extensive private collection in the country.

Perhaps it was the proximity of the New Orleans Mint (which operated from 1838 to 1909) that sparked his interest in coins. Lambert moved to New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1844 and started his first collection in the 1860s. Among his prized possessions was an autographed presentation copy of Monograph of the Dollar (1839) by J.L. Riddell, melter and refiner at the New Orleans Mint.

Lambert reportedly sold some of his coins in 1906, although the American Numismatic Association Resource Center has no information regarding the sale. At any rate, Lambert found the lure of numismatics irresistible, and whenever he sold one collection, he immediately began forming another.

In 1910 The Numismatist noted that Lambert "enjoyed immensely" the study of coins, but felt that he should "give up some of his activities." The Major reluctantly decided to part with more of his coins. The October 21-22, 1910, sale of the Lambert Collection, conducted by S.H. Chapman of Philadelphia, attracted buyers from across the country. Fierce bidding resulted in numerous record prices.

A Very Fine 1795 $10 gold piece, for example, realized $35, and a Very Fine 1834 Bechtler $1 gold piece was hammered down for $6. An uncirculated 1860 Seated Liberty half dime with 1859 reverse received a bid of $8. (Today it is valued at $25,000.)

Although not a record, the successful bid of $190 for an Extremely Fine 1794 Flowing Hair silver dollar was the highest price paid for any lot in the auction. A proof 1873 $3 gold piece, one of only 25 minted, brought a bid of $129. A proof 1876 $3 gold piece realized $120, a disappointing figure for a coin with a mintage of 45 pieces and a catalog value of $200 at the time. (A similar example changed hands for $57,500 in an October 1982 Bowers and Ruddy sale.)

Bargains abounded in the territorial gold portion of the sale. A Fine 1860 Pikes Peak $10 gold piece brought a bid of $42, and a Very Fine 1860 Clark, Gruber & Co. half eagle closed at $17.

Collectors showed little interest in the half dimes that comprised part of the collection. An uncirculated 1837 Seated Liberty half dime received a bid of only 15 cents. A group of uncirculated 1854 through 1857 half dimes realized 13 cents each, and an uncirculated 1829 Capped Bust half dime sold for 25 cents.

In 1914 the sale of yet another portion of Lambert's collection took place. "Major Richard Lambert to Dispose of His Numismatic Collection" read the headline in the May 1914 issue of Mehl's Numismatic Montbly. This sale, the 86-year-old Lambert promised, would be the final one because he wanted to "conclude [his affairs] as much as possible."

The mail-bid auction was held on June 30, 1914, in Mehl's offices in the Flatiron Building. In the absence of grading services, slabs or reference guides, grading was a purely subjective matter. "I have catalogued every coin most carefully and accurately as regards their true conditions—as I see them," Mehl explained.

Unfortunately, the catalog of the collection bears no notations of prices realized. It does, however, reveal the scope of Lambert's numismatic interests. Large cents were quite popular, and Lambert's collection contained at least one example of each date. Other series described as "nearly complete" included half cents, gold dollars and $3 gold pieces. (Lambert somehow had managed to replace the 1873 and 1876 $3 gold pieces sold in 1910.)

Like many collectors of the era, Lambert was not "fussy" about acquiring mintmarked coins. His collection of half dollars, however, featured at least one example of each date, from 1794 to 1911, with many uncirculated and proof specimens. The selection of silver dollars was equally impressive. It included a half dozen 1795 Flowing Hair dollars, 1836 and 1839 Gobrecht dollars, an "excessively rare" uncirculated 1852 Seated Liberty dollar, and an 1895 Morgan dollar.

"I believe that whatever your numismatic interest may be, there is something in this sale to interest you," wrote Mehl. Foreign crowns, American colonial coins, California gold dollars, territorial gold, so-called Bryan "dollars," fractional currency, U.S. patterns, and numismatic books all were represented in the auction. Highlighting the sale was Lot No. 224—a proof 1879 Flowing Hair Stella, or $4 gold piece, described by Mehl as "very rare and in great demand."

Eighteen months after the sale, coin collecting lost one of its prominent figures. Appropriately, it was Mehl who wrote Lambert's obituary. "We have received word advising us that Major Richard Lambert died on December 5, 1915 in New Orleans," he related. "Major Lambert was in his 88th year at the time of his death, but until very recently he enjoyed vigorous health and personally supervised the duties of the many important offices he held."

Lambert left a legacy of numismatic dedication. A collector for more than 50 years, he painstakingly assembled and then sold several collections, but his fascination with the hobby never waned. •

A resident of Michigan, Thomas S. LaMarre earned his master's degree in business administration from the University of Detroit. He has written articles for a number of numismatic publications, including COIN WORLD, COINAGE, NUMISMATIC NEWS and BANK NOTE REPORTER. His last article for THE NUMISMATIST, "The Case of the Missing Motto," appeared in the April 1992 issue.

Two Very Fine 1834 Bechtler $1 gold pieces were included in the October 1910 sale.

Featured in a section of the October 1910 auction catalog entitled "British Colonies in North America" was an "excessively rare" 1652 Willow Tree shilling in Fine condition.

Wolsey's Groat

Questions surrounding Cardinal Wolsey's issuance of a silver groat may have been raised to further tarnish the reputation of the lord chancellor.

by Thomas W. Sheehan
LM 916

NUMISMATICS CAN BE defined as "the study of coins, medals and related material." As a science, numismatics is directly related to the fields of archaeology and history. Archaeologists study coins or the tools used in their manufacture to help them understand ancient cultures and civilizations. Historians use coins in an interpretive manner.

Reading the inscription on a coin is the simplest task for a historian; the most difficult is interpreting the significance of its metallic composition, type and accessory symbols. Proper analysis of a coin will reveal facts or theories that can be applied to the social, political, artistic or economic development of a region. Oftentimes, the real value of numismatics is proven when no other primary evidence is available. Occasionally, the study of coins can support or refute written evidence.

This study uses a combination of written and numismatic evidence to examine an assumption that scholars have put forth regarding a groat issued by Cardinal Thomas Wolsey during the reign of Henry VIII. (The obverse carries a portrait of Henry and the reverse a shield, with the initials T and W on either side and a cardinal's hat below. The coin was minted at York and so bears either the voided cross or the acorn mintmark.) A historian would proceed from court records and other written material to a conclusion and, in this case, probably would not even bother to examine the coin issue very closely, if at all.

Of the 44 articles of accusation brought against Wolsey, the importance of the one dealing with the issuance of the groat obviously is minor, as it ranked #40. Secondly, a wealth of printed material concerning Wolsey is available, therefore, there has been little need to resort to numismatics for evidence.

I believe the apparent insignificance of the coin, along with the large amount of written documentation regarding Wolsey, are the reasons historians and numismatists have failed to look beyond the mere fact that the coin exists. At least two scholars—C.H.V. Sutherland and George C. Brooke—feel that by issuing a groat, Wolsey usurped the king's prerogative. Written evidence and the lack of it show that the objection was to Wolsey's

Wolsey received his cardinal's hat in 1515, an appeasement from Pope Leo X, who had refused to grant him a commission as legate.

THE FIRST OCCASION for Wolsey to prove his worth in state matters arose when he was selected to represent Henry at the court of Maximilian.

placing the cardinal's hat on the coin. In this case the coin becomes the focal point of the evidence.

Wolsey first appeared at court during the reign of Henry VII. He was the chaplain for Sir Richard Nanfant, the deputy-governor of Calais. He found Wolsey so capable and intelligent that he allowed him to take charge of his office. Wolsey, after a time, desired to return to England. His reputation preceded him, and on his arrival, he became the king's chaplain. As Wolsey's popularity grew, he was given more responsibilities.

The first occasion for Wolsey to prove his worth in state matters arose when he was selected to represent Henry at the court of Maximilian. The speed with which Wolsey carried out his mission so amazed the king that he was rewarded shortly thereafter with the deanery of Lincoln, which, according to George Cavendish in The Life and Death of Thomas Wolsey, "was one of the worthiest spiritual promotions that he gave under the degree of a bishoprick." By the time of Henry's death in 1509, Wolsey was well entrenched at court.

Henry VII and Wolsey shared the goal of moving toward a centralized government. He was extremely effectual in carrying out policies initiated by Henry. His capabilities, proven to this point, provided the foundation for the confidence in which he was held by Henry VIII for the next 21 years.

During the first years of Henry VIII's reign, Wolsey held the office of royal almoner (in charge of distribution of alms on behalf of the king), a post that kept him in close contact with the court and enabled him to take on more day-to-day affairs of state. Eventually he became the king's principal advisor. In 1515 Wolsey was appointed Lord Chancellor, and by 1517 he was given control of the privy seal.

Wolsey's religious influence came a bit more slowly. He received the archbishopric of York in 1514 and the cardinal's hat in 1515. The latter position came as an appeasement when Pope Leo X refused his request for a commission as legate, the pope's official representative or envoy. He continued his efforts to gain more religious authority and received it three years later, when he finally was given a legatine commission.

The church title Wolsey gained was no indication of a deep religious conviction. He was more concerned with the material gain he could receive through his authority. That he was guilty of pluralism is a well-known fact. At one time he controlled six sees, and he made every effort to extract money from his religious position. Although he was the archbishop of York for 16 years, it was not until after his indictment that he actually visited the diocese of York.

In the meantime, a combination of events led Henry VIII to launch an attack on France. England and France had been at odds since the reign of Henry VII. Although the English monarchy had claimed title to France, Henry VII had been satisfied with an annual tribute from France rather than risk war. Eventually, France threatened to invade Italy, and Spain felt vulnerable. A meeting in 1520 between Henry VIII and the king of France, Francis I, on the Field of Cloth of Gold turned out to be nothing but a show. The eventual war was expensive.

With troops to pay and supplies to buy, Henry needed to create more money. Complicating matters was an imbalance between the values of English and European coinage. English gold coins were leaving the country. It was more advantageous for merchants to trade their English gold abroad than to have it recoined. Since foreign gold was worth more, it actually was being imported. Henry called on Lord Chancellor Wolsey to remedy the situation.

Wolsey's first measure was to issue a proclamation fixing the prices of certain coins at the same value they had in foreign countries. Three months later, in November 1526, Wolsey reformed the entire monetary system. Among the changes he made, two are important here. He created two new coins—the "George Noble," a gold coin that filled the gap when the Angel was valued upward, and the "Crown of the Double Rose," which was to counter use of the French ecu. The second change was the reduction in weight of the silver groat and the addition of Henry VIII's portrait in profile.

At the same time, the church was going through a period of change. It was no longer the popular institution it once had been. The influence of Martin Luther and the Anabaptists was not strong in England, but it was beginning to be felt. Henry did all he could to stifle Luther's teachings. He wrote his own attack against Luther, for which the Pope gave him the title "Defender of the Faith." Henry could see the disruption Luther's teaching was causing on the Continent. He ascribed the loss of Hungary in 1526 to the dissension in the Church and refused the Pope's plea for assistance until the other Christian princes could come to an agreement.

As part of his coinage reform in November 1526, Cardinal Thomas Wolsey reduced the weight of the groat and added Henry VIII's profile. Wolsey's initials, TW, appear on the reverse, along with the cardinal's hat. BRITISH MUSEUM COLLECTION

Collecting and Exhibiting Western Americana

The wild and wooly West comes alive in exhibits of U.S. commemorative coinage and Colorado exnumia.

by Richard L. Goudie
ANA 60967

A medal commemorates the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, held in St. Louis in 1904, as well as the original Louisiana Purchase a century before.

“GO WEST, YOUNG man, go West,” advised Horace Greeley, and thousands took his advice. They pursued a plethora of endeavors and in the process opened up the Western United States to settlement. Western Americana is a fascinating and diverse field for collectors, including numismatists. The colorful history of western expansion beyond the Mississippi River is recorded by many interesting numismatic collectibles.

To demonstrate the scope of western numismatics, I will describe several items in each of ten categories: exploration, transportation, commemorative coins, private issues, communications, souvenir issues, banking, ranching, paper items and advertising pieces. You will quickly see that most of the examples are from Colorado, my state of residence. However, Western Americana includes material issued by any American territory or state west of the Mississippi River (excluding Alaska and Hawaii).

Exploration

THE UNITED STATES acquired a large area of the West through the Louisiana Purchase in 1803. (Many centennial exposition medals are associated with this event.) In 1806 President Thomas Jefferson directed the U.S. Army to explore the new territory and map some of its watersheds, selecting Captain Zebulon Pike to lead a detachment west from St. Louis.

While exploring present-day Colorado, Pike sighted what is now known as Pikes Peak. In September 1906, a centennial celebration of this event was held in Colorado Springs. A commemorative medal, designed by Charles Barber and produced by the Philadelphia Mint, was sold to finance centennial activities.

TO CELEBRATE ITS 50th anniversary in 1902, Wells Fargo presented every employee having at least one year's service with a beautiful medal.

Transportation

WELLS, FARGO & COMPANY provided essential banking, express and stage-coach services to the pioneers of the West. Founded in 1852 in San Francisco, by 1880 the firm had 573 agents scattered about the western United States. To celebrate its 50th anniversary in 1902, Wells Fargo presented every employee having at least one year's service with a beautiful medal. The piece depicts each phase of the company's pioneer activities.

Commemorative Coins

WESTERN AMERICAN THEMES are prevalent in the United States commemorative half dollar series, such as the 1922 Oregon Trail piece, with its covered wagon scene; the 1921 Missouri Centennial half dollar with its illustration of a frontiersman and an Indian; the 1925 California Diamond Jubilee coin showing an 1849 Gold Rush prospector panning for gold; the 1925 Fort Vancouver centennial piece, picturing a buckskin-clad pioneer; and the 1934-38 Texas Centennial issue that honors General Sam Houston and Stephen Austin, founders of the Republic and State of Texas. An interesting exhibit could be built around any one of these attractive coins.

To celebrate its 50th anniversary, Wells, Fargo & Company presented its employees with a commemorative medal.

Joseph Leshner's silver "Referendum Dollars" were intended to bolster the silver-mining industry in the Pikes Peak region.

The United States commemorative half dollar series includes several coins with Western themes.

A number of medals were issued to mark the 100th anniversary of the Pony Express, famed for its dedication to delivering mail to the Wild West.

TO FURTHER THE cause of silver mining, he sold a series of octagonal "referendum souvenirs," first from his home and then through merchants at their places of business.

Private Issues

PRIVATE MINTS, ASSAYERS, banks and individuals issued a variety of numismatic items associated with the West. An introduction to these fascinating pieces can be found in R.S. Yeoman's A Guide Book of United States Coins and Hibler and Kaplan's So-Called Dollars. For the purpose of illustration, I have selected a private issue that is coveted by many collectors—the Leshner Referendum dollar.

Joseph Leshner was a miner from Leadville, Colorado, who moved to Victor during Colorado's gold mining heyday in the Cripple Creek mining district around the turn of the 20th century. To further the cause of silver mining, he sold a series of octagonal "referendum souvenirs," first from his home and then through merchants at their places of business. Merchants often imprinted the dollars with their names.

The 1900 issue carried a $1.25 denomination, while the 1901 series was valued at $1.00. Leshner guaranteed redemption in U.S. currency, but few pieces were ever redeemed. His house in Victor, Colorado, was purchased by Q. David Bowers and donated to the ANA, which restored the dwelling with funds generated by the sale of modern reproductions of the Leshner dollar bearing a picture of the Leshner House on the reverse.

Communications

PRIVATE MAIL CARRIERS, telegraph companies and the U.S. Mail provide interesting historical material for numismatic exhibits. For example, the Pony Express was established by the Central Overland, California and Pikes Peak Express Company on April 3, 1860. It provided mail service by horse and rider between St. Joseph, Missouri, and Sacramento, California. Service was discontinued October 24, 1861, following the completion of telegraph service to Salt Lake City, Utah.

A centennial celebration was staged in 1960, with riders racing along the original route. An official medal was struck by the Philadelphia Mint, and many attractive private medals were issued. One of the rarest is a silver issue produced by Dr. Molie Mummey of Denver, of which only 500 were struck.

Souvenir Medals

SOUVENIR MEDALS DOCUMENT many noteworthy events, such as a gold rush or mining strike. Illustrated here are two such collectibles. One, the "Rush to the Rockies" centennial medal struck by the Philadelphia Mint in 1959, serves a dual purpose, with the reverse commemorating the dedication of the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

The second issue commemorates Bob Womack's discovery of gold in Cripple Creek in 1891. The most desirable medal in this series is a bronze specimen plated with Cripple Creek gold.

Banking

THE ISSUES OF banks and private mints represent another area of collecting. Gold dust was a medium of exchange in the West and was used as payment to merchants and bartenders. The dust often was shipped east to Leavenworth, Kansas, where it was assayed and then returned to Denver in the form of ingots.

Austin and Milton Clark and Emmanuel Gruber recognized that this situation presented a unique business opportunity. In Denver in 1860, they formed Clark, Gruber & Co., which provided both banking and minting services. The mint was sold to the U.S. government in 1863, and the banking activity emerged as the First National Bank of Denver.

In the interim, Clark, Gruber & Co. issued its own "Pikes Peak Gold" pieces in denominations of $2½, $5, $10 and $20. The obverses of the $10 and $20 coins picture a mountain purported to be Pikes Peak.

Ranching

FARMERS AND RANCHERS played a large part in opening up the West. Some were homesteaders, and many grazed cattle on the open range. Cattlemen's associations were formed in response to range wars, cattle rustling and other problems that plagued the western rancher. A souvenir badge commemorates the 1888 meeting of the International Range, Cattle and Horse Grower's Association in Denver, while a medal notes the centennial of the Colorado Cattlemen's Association in 1967.

Paper Items

CHECKS, BONDS AND stock certificates provide endless opportunities for the collector of Western Americana. Such documents chronicle a myriad Struck by the Philadelphia Mint in 1959, the "Rush to the Rockies" medal celebrates the Colorado gold rush and the dedication of the U.S. Air Force Academy.

From 1860 to 1863, Denver's Clark, Gruber & Co. issued its own coinage. The "mountain" pictured on the obverse of the $10 and $20 denominations is purported to be Pikes Peak.

of historical events and business endeavors. Some collectors find the vignettes on checks and stock certificates particularly attractive and interesting, while others search for signatures of famous Westerners.

Souvenir cards provide an affordable way of collecting rare stock certificates and signatures without depleting your savings account. An example is the souvenir card issued for the Colorado Springs Coin Show in July 1986. It not only pictures an uncommon certificate, but also features the signature of railroad builder Otto Mears and includes a short history of the pioneer railroad—all for about $3.

Advertising Pieces

MINING CAMPS AND towns provide a wealth of colorful examples of Western Americana, among them advertising mirrors and tokens issued by merchants and saloons, many of which are sought-after collectibles. Shown here are tokens from the Hotel Hoffman in Colorado City. A token denominated 12½ cents was given as change for a quarter by the Cripple Creek Club.

Exhibiting Western Americana

ONE OF THE best ways to capture the flavor and history of the Old West is to create a numismatic exhibit. In preparing your display, you can concentrate on one facet described above or draw upon a variety of items. An exhibit I prepared for a local coin show focused on Colorado brewery owner

Those tendering a quarter for a beer at the Cripple Creek Club likely received this 12½-cent token in change.

Checks, bonds and stock certificates can spice up a numismatic exhibit of Western Americana.

Zang's brewing company was the focus of an exhibit prepared by the author for a local coin show.

The Hotel Hoffman in Colorado City produced a number of advertising pieces.

Philip Zang and his entrepreneurial son, Adolph, whose beer became the most popular in the West. Adolph Zang also was actively involved in the Cripple Creek gold rush and was a major stockholder in and secretary of the famous Vindicator Mine.

My display included a barroom photograph and tokens from E.H. Asmussen's Denver Exchange Bar in Cripple Creek, which served Zang's beer. Asmussen also was a wholesale distributor of the beverage, as shown by a colorful invoice. An unusual Zang's advertising mirror helped round out the exhibit.

It is prudent to review the exhibiting rules before preparing your exhibit for competitive display. In official ANA competition, the judges consider numismatic information (35 points), presentation (30 points), completeness (15 points), condition (10 points) and rarity (10 points).

Exhibiting on the local, regional or national level is enjoyable and educational for both you and your fellow collectors. As a collector of Western Americana for 25 years, I hope this brief overview will prompt some readers to join the fun.

Past president of the Colorado Springs Numismatic Society and former secretary of the Colorado Springs Coin Club, Dick Goudie was the first recipient of the local William C. Henderson Award for his dedication to the study and exhibiting of western numismatics. The two Colorado Springs organizations plan to highlight displays of Western Americana at the ANA's 1993 Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs.

An Analysis of Mint-State Carson City Coins

by David J. Locker
ANA 150274

A study of data compiled from Professional Coin Grading Service and Numismatic Guaranty Corporation population reports confirms the rarity of mint-state Carson City coinage.

Actual Size: 21.54mm

To date, only two mint-state 1882-CC half eagles have been encapsulated by PCGS and NGC, and only three examples were found in a 15-year auction survey.

FROM ITS INCEPTION through March 1992, the Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) of Newport Beach, California, graded more than 2.2 million U.S. coins. The Numismatic Guaranty Corporation of Parsippany, New Jersey, has graded close to 1 million coins. With sample sizes this large, it is statistically possible to arrive at many conclusions with high confidence levels regarding relevant and significant numismatic properties representative of the entire population of U.S. coins.

The focus of this study is a particular subset of the coins graded to date, namely the coins minted at the historically fascinating Carson City (Nevada) Mint. Although emphasis is given to this manageable subset, the mathematical and statistical techniques employed here can be applied to any selected sample of information available in the intriguing PCGS and NGC databases.

The March 1992 "Population Report" data for 2,427 coins graded by PCGS and NGC was analyzed, yielding many interesting results relating to rarity and relative coin quality across denominations. The results suggest that mint-state Carson City coins (excluding Morgan dollars) are amazingly rare, a finding that is consistent with and supportive of conclusions that have been derived using other analytical techniques. Furthermore, the present analysis shows with very high levels of statistical confidence that there is a significant correlation between grades of surviving mint-state Carson City coins and denomination.

... FOR 48 PERCENT of the Carson City non-Morgan varieties, no mint-state examples have been graded by PCGS, emphasizing the incredible rarity of these coins ...

Rarity of Carson City Coins

THE 2,427 COINS investigated here represent all of the mint-state Carson City coins graded MS-60 to MS-70 by PCGS and NGC through March 1992. (The 13 Morgan dollar varieties, excluded from this study, were analyzed separately and the results published in the September 1991 issue of The Numismatist.) This study focuses on 97 of the 110 major varieties produced during the Carson City Mint's 21 years of operation (1870-85, 1889-93): 9 dimes, 2 20-cent pieces, 9 quarters, 10 half dollars, 4 Seated Liberty dollars, 6 Trade dollars, 19 half eagles, 19 eagles and 19 double eagles. Of these 97 varieties, only 64 have been found to exist in mint state by PCGS and NGC. In other words, for 34 percent of the Carson City non-Morgan varieties, no mint-state examples have been graded by either grading service, emphasizing the incredible rarity of these coins in uncirculated condition.

Statistics for the 2,427 mint-state coins graded by PCGS and NGC are summarized in Table 1. These coins represent a mere .0057 percent of the total number of Carson City non-Morgan coins produced. The number of each denomination graded as a percentage of the total number struck is displayed in a bar graph in Figure 1. A relatively high percentage of the total mintage of 20-cent pieces, Seated Liberty dollars and gold coinage has been graded. It seems likely that because of the obvious low mintage for these five coins (only about 2 million, or 4.8 percent, of the 42.8 million produced), collectors and investors have readily recognized their rarity and have elected to grade and encapsulate them.

PCGS and NGC have encapsulated and graded just three mint-state 1883 Carson City double eagles.

This 1884-CC eagle is the only such specimen to have been graded in mint state by PCGS or NGC. David Akers' 59-year auction survey revealed only three appearances of this phenomenally rare coin.

To better understand the relationships that determine which mint-state coins have been submitted for grading, the percentage graded was compared to the mintage of each of the nine denominations studied (see Figure 2). We find that a linear relationship statistically explains 95 percent of the data. This figure shows that even though the high-mintage Carson City coins are the most common in mint state, they actually are "rarer" (per million) than the issues with lower mintages. That is, the survival rate is inversely related to the number minted. This relationship suggests that a relatively fixed population of "unique" and "discriminating" collectors obtained and maintained the integrity of these Carson City coins over the past century.

The single "outlier" (that is, a data point that is not explained by the indicated straight-line model) is the left-most point, which corresponds to the Seated Liberty dollar. If the straight-line model in Figure 2 were to hold true for the Seated Liberty dollars, then we would predict that 130 coins should have been graded. Recognizing that only 13 Seated Liberty dollars have been graded and only 54 auction appearances are recorded between 1972 and 1986 reveals the risk of such extrapolations and emphasizes the striking scarcity of these coins. Before we know if the suggested low mint-state grading relative to the other Carson City coins is statistically significant, more data will have to be collected.

Another data point worthy of some comment is the fourth from the right in Figure 2, which corresponds to Trade dollars. Although this point is not an "outlier," a relatively low percentage of mint-state Trade dollars has been graded. This observation is consistent with several noteworthy factors in the history of the U.S. Trade dollar series: 1) most were shipped to the Orient to facilitate world trade; 2) many were mutilated with "chop marks" to certify authenticity; and 3) many of the survivors were melted through the U.S. redemption program. No doubt collectors and investors should carefully monitor population reports on Seated Liberty and Trade dollars.

When the Carson City Mint opened in 1870, the surrounding towns were "coin poor," and, as a result, virtually all of the coins struck from 1870 to 1874 went directly into circulation. This economic need surely contributes to the observed rarity of mint-state specimens from the earlier Carson City issues. It was not until the "Big Bonanza" strike at Virginia City's Consolidated Virginia Mine in 1873 that the southwestern towns began to have an abundance of Carson City coins to spend. There can be little doubt that the high silver mintages at the Carson City Mint in 1875, 1876 and 1877 were a direct result of this famous silver discovery. Table 2 displays the profile of the silver extracted from two neighboring mines—the Consolidated Virginia Mine, and the California Mine—from 1873 to 1878.

Table 3 lists the number of mint-state coins graded by the two services as a function of denomination, date and total mintage. Comparing Tables 2 and 3 reveals a clear correlation among the high mine yields, the large mintages, and the high number of encapsulated mint-state 1876 and 1877 silver dimes, quarters and halves. The total number of encapsulated mint-state coins in 1877 for just three denominations—dime, quarter and half dollar—represents more than 25 percent of all of the mint-state non-Morgan Carson City coins graded to date. If one were to total the encapsulated specimens for the 12 most common mint-state non-Morgan varieties (1875, 1876 and 1877 dime; 1875 20-cent piece; 1876, 1877 and 1878 quarter; 1877 half dollar; 1875 Trade dollar; 1891 half eagle; 1891 eagle; and 1875 double eagle), then 70 percent of the 2,427 coins graded mint-state would be identified. As the results in Table 3 suggest, the remaining 85 varieties are condition rarities.

The number of coins minted is interesting as a crude measure of rarity; however, the population data clearly adds new information. Reviewing the second and last columns of Table 1 reveals that these coins are exceptionally rare in mint state and that even when found in uncirculated condition, their average grades are low. For the entire set of these encapsulated, uncirculated coins, the weighted mean grade is only 62.5.

These findings on rarity are consistent with the exhaustive analyses by Weimar W. White, published in The Gobrecht Journal and The Numismatist, in which 15 years of auction catalogs were surveyed for silver and 8 years for gold coins. White's survey of gold coins has been expanded to include auction data from 1972 to 1978 in Rome's Prices Realized. This additional information makes the basis number of years for the gold coin data the same as for the silver coins—15 years—and raises the total number of auctioned uncirculated non-Morgan Carson City coins to 3,000. The results are summarized in the fourth column in Table 1. PCGS and NGC have graded 2,427 coins, a number intriguingly close to the 3,000 coins revealed in these auction records. A comparison of the number of graded coins versus the auction survey results is graphically provided in Figure 3.

It is interesting to note that the numbers of graded coins are nearly equal to the numbers from the auction survey for the small silver denominations (dime, 20-cent piece and quarter) and for the gold eagle. On the other hand, the numbers of half dollars, Seated Liberty dollars, Trade dollars and double eagles found in the auction survey are substantially greater than the numbers graded.

For the gold coins, a contributing factor may be that mint-state gold coins have average grades on the borderline of circulated and uncirculated, whereas the average grade of the small silver coins is significantly removed from this borderline. Since these average grades are statistically representative of the intrinsic grades for the surviving mint-state coins, it is conceivable that a biased number of borderline gold coins fell into the uncirculated category when evaluated by the auction catalogers, causing the shaded bars in Figure 3 to overstate the "true" number of mint-state coins.

On the other hand, because the grade distribution for small silver coins ranges around much higher average grades, the existence of subtle cataloger bias would not have a similarly large impact on the number of coins identified as being in mint-state condition.

Only one mint-state version of the 1873 Carson City "without arrows" half dollar has been graded to date, and only 14 were tabulated in the 15-year auction survey.

Note, however, that this explanation does not provide a perfect correlation for all denominations. Several caveats must be considered when interpreting the survey and the encapsulation data.

Quality of Carson City Coins

THE WEIGHTED MEAN grades for each denomination emphasized in the present analysis are tabulated in the last column of Table 1 and illustrated in Figure 4. A casual examination of the graph suggests that the grade of the coins tends to decline nearly monotonically as the denomination increases. In that the number of coins analyzed to date is statistically large and likely representative of the entire population of surviving coins, an analysis was conducted to establish the significance of the apparent correlation between grade and denomination.

The nine denominations were sorted into three categories: small silver coins (dimes through halves), large silver coins (dollars) and gold coinage. The results of this exercise, provided in Table 4, show that the coins in these three categories have weighted mean grades of 63.4, 62.0 and 60.7, respectively. Standard statistical procedures (Z-statistic analysis) were employed to test two hypotheses:

1) the difference between the mean grade of "small" and "large" silver coins is less than 1 grade point

2) the difference between the mean grade of the "large" silver coins and the gold coins is less than 1 grade point

Upon analysis, both of these hypotheses were rejected (with a significance level of 5 percent). In other words, we can reject with confidence the hypothesis that the grades among the denominations are the same. We have demonstrated that grade tends to decline as the denomination increases.

Several factors could have contributed to the absolute rarity of high-quality mint-state coins in the larger denominations. The expense of saving and preserving silver dollars and gold coins would have been more financially painful than "collecting" dimes, quarters and halves. Furthermore,

A Cabinet of Legendary Proportions

A wealth of information has been made available by the author's study of the Floyd T. Starr Collection, once known to many collectors as the wondrous "Philadelphia Estate."

by Michael Hodder
ANA 104582

The unique proof 1856 "upright 5" gold dollar indicates that the Mint was changing its date design from the "slanting 5" to the "upright 5" during the period 1855-56. It was struck after the "slanting 5" variety as an example of the new date design adopted late in 1856.

FLOYD T. STARR was born in Philadelphia in 1904 and remained a resident of that numismatically important city until his death. Shortly after his graduation from the University of Pennsylvania in 1929, he joined the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, where he worked for the rest of his business career.

Upon retirement, Starr had risen to the rank of financial vice president for the firm. He was a man of settled habits who also enjoyed fishing and hunting.

He began collecting coins in the 1920s, buying specimens from sales held by Thomas Elder, B. Max Mehl and other luminaries of the numismatic world of the time. By his death in 1971, Starr had amassed one of the finest collections of United States gold, silver and copper coins ever assembled. His outstanding large cents were sold at auction by Stack's in June 1984.

Very little was known about Starr's small cents and silver and gold coins, however, before Walter Breen published his landmark Encyclopedia of United States and Colonial Proof Coins in 1977. Breen used the Starr Collection as the basis of his study of proof coins, since the collection is so rich in these delicacies. He was given the unrivaled opportunity of studying Starr's collection and, as is his habit, did a first-class job. Throughout Breen's book are references to proof coins in a "Philadelphia Estate," but only those who knew Breen or had been in numismatics since the 1950s understood that this phrase stood for the Floyd T. Starr Collection. Virtually all other collectors had no idea of the richness and depth of Starr's collection and could only wonder who put together this magnificent assemblage.

I have been privileged to assist Stack's in cataloging the Starr collection of small cents and silver and gold coins, particularly the early issues (1792-1856), patterns and gold. It is safe to say that the promise of the legendary "Philadelphia Estate" is more than fulfilled by the coins themselves. Many are unique, the finest or among the finest known, or varieties only rumored among numismatists. Because I have had ample time to study Starr's coins in depth, some new information of importance to collectors has been discovered, which changes the perception of the Starr Collection.

The Starr pedigrees Breen included in his book of proof coins were based upon notes in Starr's own hand on the coin envelopes. His notes included the dates he purchased the coins, but these were always either the days on which he received the coins or the invoice dates from the sellers. In the many instances of auction lots, they were not the dates of the original auction sales. Accordingly, most are entirely inaccurate, because Starr's notes were misleading in the first place. Collectors who like to track the history of ownership of great rarities should be aware of this consistent discrepancy.

When he came to write his book on proof coins, Breen relied on his prodigious, eidetic memory and on notes he had taken about coins he had seen. In several cases, however, he failed to include some of the Starr coins we know he had actually seen (many years ago Breen inventoried Starr's coins for Charles Wormser). One example is the Roman-finish proof 1909 double eagle, another is the proof 1857 Valentine-3 half dime.

These observations are not intended to denigrate Breen's work. His encyclopedia of proof coins is the finest single work on the subject ever written and will stand as such for decades to come. Rather, as with the inaccurate pedigrees, collectors should be advised to check his listing against the contents of the auction catalogs. In some cases, the number of known specimens of a great rarity has been revised dramatically upward. In other cases, issues that are now known to survive in proof format were not listed, and these important corrections should also be made.

The contents of the Starr Collection have increased our knowledge of some of America's most numismatically important and interesting coins. The following listing includes only some of the highlights of the new understandings made possible by Floyd T. Starr's collection.

THE PROOF 1831 Valentine-3 may be the only known survivor. It was struck from the latest state of the reverse die, as expected from John McCloskey's study published in the ANA Centennial Anthology. The proof 1843 is a long-neglected variety. It shows dramatic triple punching in the date numerals. The obverse dies for the proof 1846, 1847 "large date and letters," 1849 "repunched date," and 1853 "no arrows" half dimes all were sunk from hubs raised from the same master die. The obverse of the 1848 "large date," however, was sunk from an entirely different working hub.

Dimes

THE PROOF 1821 "small date" (JR-9) appears to be another of the experimental dimes of the early 1820s. It is very similar to the 1820 with the experimental upset rim and the mature collar proof issues of 1828 and 1831, but quite different from its 1821 "large date" cousin. It is quite possible that William Kneass also tried his new collar on the 1821 "small date" proofs, as well as on the earlier 1820 issue. The proof dimes of 1845-49 and 1857 all were struck from one or more obverses sunk by the same hub (or possibly from working hubs raised from the same master die). The 1849 issue is a repunched date and not an 1849/8 overdate (the listing for #3256 in Breen's Encyclopedia should be removed).

Silver Dollars

THE PROOF DOLLARS of 1841, 1843, 1846, 1847 and 1849 and some of 1850 all were struck from the same reverse die, with die defects on the final A of AMERICA. Breen's reverse B-1 of 1840 is imaginary and should be deleted. A new reverse was introduced in 1850 and appears on the 1851 original; it may have been the die used for the 1850 restrikes. The reverse for the 1852 original is not the same die seen on the 1851 originals! The reverse seen on the Starr 1852 restrike is not the same as that found on the 1840-50 proofs or the 1851 original, but does correspond to that of the 1851 restrike and the Norweb 1852 (#3800). A new reverse appears to have been used for the 1853 originals, different from that of the 1852s and the restrikes of 1862-63.

.....

Patterns

THE 1868 PATTERN 1-, 3- and 5-cent pieces (Judd 608, 618 and 633) were struck before December 14 of that year, since a complete set of six pieces was presented by Mint Director Linderman to the daughter of a prominent Philadelphia artist on that date. The set is housed in a presentation case designed to display both the obverse and the reverse of each type. The exact dating of the presentation coins allows us to determine the cutoff date for their striking, as well as to see what a genuine presentation case of the period looked like.

Gold Dollars

THE PROOF 1849 "closed wreath" issue has heavy date numerals. Accordingly, Breen's Encyclopedia listing for #6005 should be emended to read "+?P" and his #B-6006 to read "At least 2 proofs known." The unique proof 1856 "upright 5" shows that the Mint was changing its date design from the "slanting 5" to the "upright 5" during the period 1855-56. The 1856 "upright 5" proof was struck after the "slanting 5" variety as an example of the new date design adopted late in 1856. The 1861 and 1862 proofs were both struck from the same dies after the final digit of the date had been changed. The latter is not an overdate, however.

$3 Gold Pieces

THE LOW NUMBER of proof 1861 $3 gold pieces released is easily understood. On February 4 of that year, the Confederate States of America was established at Montgomery, Alabama. Five days later, Jefferson Davis was elected president of the Confederacy. Eight days later, Fort Sumter was fired upon. Obviously, the Mint had more to worry about than selling proof gold coins of any kind to collectors! Breen's Encyclopedia entry #6371 is not a restrike of the 1867-68 period, since it shares a reverse die with the proof 1865 in the American Numismatic Society set, which can be traced back to the Mint. His description of the 1867-68 obverse may also need further study.

There are many, many more examples that might be included above. New dies, detailed descriptions of neglected or unrecorded dies, new additions to the proof census, and many new historical anecdotes have been made possible by the coins in the Starr Collection. Floyd T. Starr's coins have inspired a new understanding of why proof coins were struck from 1796-1821, as well as a radical revision of the appropriate standards to apply to early proofs.

The Starr Collection is not as broad as others of its generation; it did not include many colonial coins, for example. However, Starr insisted on the highest possible quality for his collection, and this led him to concentrate on proofs. That was why Walter Breen selected the Starr coins as an important basis for his ground-breaking study of proof coinage. A new examination of the Starr Collection has allowed us to appreciate even more these aristocrats of American coinage. •

Among the other proof coin delicacies in the Starr Collection are an original 1834 half dollar, one of four known; an 1884 Trade dollar, the finest of 10 known; and an 1827 half eagle, among the finest known.

Top Ten Things to Look for at a Coin Show

AS SUMMER DRAWS to a close, the traditional season for coin shows approaches. The tan acquired at ANA's Orlando convention may be fading, but enthusiasm for treasure hunting is on the rise. Certain patterns of behavior and experience seem to repeat themselves year after year, regardless of the state of the hobby. The popularity of "top 10" lists has risen as a result of their frequent use by talk show host David Letterman, and in this spirit I'd like to make some projections for sights to be seen on the bourse floor this fall.

10. Ridiculously overgraded coins. We all have differences of opinion with respect to grading, and most sellers tend to be slightly optimistic when grading their own material. However, some coins have been assigned grades that have absolutely no connection with reality. Even a dealer who consistently grades within a certain range of error will occasionally have one or more pieces that seem to have been included in his case solely for comic relief. You know what I mean—the polished EF 1921 Morgan dollar with a deep rim cut labeled "BU" or the corroded large cent recovered with a metal detector and described as "Choice."

What is the reason behind such hopeless attempts at moving this profoundly undesirable material? Does the seller think that the Morgan dollar will be perceived as a bargain by some collector if priced at the level of a problem-free EF? I suppose every coin has a buyer at some price, although it would be fascinating to learn how many persons acquire such coins knowing they are vastly overgraded versus the number who simply let the price do their grading for them.

9. Greysheets, Red Books, eyeglasses and other paraphernalia left at dealers' tables. A recent issue of Numismatic News ran a brief item describing all of the valuables turned in to lost-and-found at the Central States Numismatic Society's coin show in Minneapolis. While the emphasis was on the expensive coins and cash carelessly misplaced, a number of less valuable, though still useful items were listed.

In my own experience, the one thing most easily set down and then forgotten is a magnifier. This essential tool is used to examine nearly every prospective purchase and usually placed on the table immediately thereafter. Oftentimes it remains there while cash is withdrawn or checks written, and then left behind. So prevalent is this problem that many collectors and dealers have taken to suspending their magnifiers on a string around their necks. I've thought of doing this myself, but I can't remember where I left the ball of string.

8. Slabs not being broken open with hammers. The musical sound of shattering plastic no longer rings through the aisles of every bourse floor as it once did during those halcyon years of 1987-90. With the typical MS-65 coin now worth about $1.37 more than its MS-64 counterpart, the economic incentive for resubmitting each coin a half dozen times in an attempt to raise its grade one point no longer exists. Dealers are more careful about adding to their overhead, and certified coins typically are sold in the same holder in which they were bought. This turn of events has devastated the trade in hammers. Those dealers who liquidated their numismatic assets and reinvested in hardware have now become marketmakers in apples and pencils on downtown streetcorners.

7. Overpriced food concessions. How is it that two years of recession have had no effect whatsoever on the price of hot dogs? It seems that convention centers and major league ballparks are locked in a perpetual struggle to see which can wrest the greatest amount of money from hungry patrons. I've largely given up eating hot dogs and hamburgers at coin shows, since the price of either surpassed MS-65 Morgan dollars earlier this year. I'm down to those giant pretzels that seem to have become smaller of late. Perhaps those dealers and investors who have recovered their losses in the hammer market may want to move into this prosperous growth industry. Anyone for paper hats?

6. Finding the coin you want most after you've spent all your money on something else. This is pretty much self-explanatory for anyone who does not have the presence of mind to strike it rich before entering the hobby. Most of us live on a budget, and it is axiomatic that the coin you want most will not be located until after your spendable cash has been reduced to 20 percent below the value of that item. This is known as Mehl's Law, after the late, great dealer B. Max Mehl, who always seemed to have something for everyone. This phenomenon may occur within the first hour of a show or take several days at an ANA convention. But rest assured, it will happen to you!

5. Lots of pizza. Why do coin dealers love pizza so? Is it because these delicious pies can be delivered directly to one's bourse table? Perhaps. Is it because pizza is fabulously rich in the four major food groups: fat, cholesterol, sodium and garlic? Perhaps not. All I know is that I love pizza as much as any coin dealer, and it's very distracting to try to read that fine print in The Coin Dealer Newsletter while the scent of pepperoni drifts across the table. In fact, I'm often tempted to have my own pizza delivered at a show, but without a bourse table of my own it's too difficult for the fellow from Shorty's Pizza Emporium to find me. I could buy a slice from the food concession, but then I'd have to sell my set of Mercury dimes to pay for it.

4. Baseball cards. Enough said about that.

3. Whitman coin folders. It was recently determined that there are presently 3.2 Whitman folders for every man, woman and child on the planet. There are enough Lincoln cent folders alone to go around the earth 12 times. Actually, these are merely estimates; the authorities lost count several years ago. Only the late Dick Yeoman knew how many were out there, and he never told. Ken Bressett tried to get this information from him, but to no avail.

Of course, I am kidding—even so, it seems that these things are everywhere. Although no longer found in toy and variety stores to the extent that they once were, the old blue folders are still omnipresent at coin shows. You're not likely to see them in the cases of dealers specializing in high-priced rarities, but the more typical, middle-of-the-road dealers usually have a few on hand, with or without coins. As a collector of old folders and albums, I prefer the latter; I have enough worn-out Lincoln cents, thank you.

2. Bored spouses and offspring. There is probably no greater torment than being the child or spouse of someone whose activities are of utterly no interest. How many times have you witnessed a dealer's wife, husband or child staring vacantly at the passing hordes or reading a book whose attraction would be extremely limited under more favorable circumstances? Have you seen the weary toddlers of an enthusiastic collector burying their heads in his shirt or her dress? Such scenes might be painful to watch were it not for the fact that one is so enraptured to be in the presence of thousands of coins, medals, notes and tokens. For the innocent victims of numismatics there is little hope. I understand that a support group has been started for the families of numismatists and yet another is forming for hobbyists who have become the victims of violence at the hands of family members disinterested in numismatics. For more information call 1-800 . . .

There is probably no greater torment than being the child or spouse of someone whose numismatic activities are of entirely no interest.

1. Frustrated collectors buying duplicates. It seems that when one is close to completing a set of coins, the word is spread among all dealers and collectors to hide any specimens of the few pieces still needed. This practice has certainly succeeded in foiling my attempts to complete a set of USA/Philippines coinage of 1903-45, and others have experienced it as well.

That Rarity-2 (R-2) large cent variety frequently becomes an R-6 only for the collector who needs it. Compounding this problem are fellow collectors who own the desired specimens, but stubbornly insist that they enjoy having them as much as you would. This, you tell them, is simply not true, but to no avail. In frustration, you temporarily forget about completing that EF set of Indian Head cents and begin assembling a second set in Fine. What else are you to do when you love Indian Head cents and can't find a problem-free EF 1872?

This phenomenon is a major component of Mehl's Law described in number 6 above. A solution for this problem is not being pursued vigorously within the numismatic community, since collectors with the self-discipline to hold onto their money until the needed items are found would be ruinous for the industry. •

A Gobrecht Dollar Puzzle

IN THE COURSE of writing United States Silver Dollars and Trade Dollars: A Complete Encyclopedia, I had the enjoyable task of looking through virtually every book, auction catalog and major article written about America's largest silver denominations. In addition, I examined countless coins in detail and corresponded with collectors and researchers. As of this writing, the manuscript is nearly complete, and I am looking at a December publication date.

While a number of silver dollar mysteries were solved, or at least illuminated, several other puzzles were created. One of the most significant involves the Gobrecht silver dollars of 1836 and 1839. If you own one or more specimens of either of these dates, perhaps you can help.

First, some background information. Stated briefly, in 1836 Chief Engraver Christian Gobrecht created a new style of silver dollar. Known today as the Seated Liberty motif, based on sketches by Chief Engraver William Kneass and, in particular, by artists Thomas Sully and Titian Peale, the coin's final obverse design shows Miss Liberty seated on a rock, holding a staff surmounted by a liberty cap. On the 1836 version, there are no stars in the obverse field. The reverse shows a flying eagle amid a galaxy of 26 stars (13 large and 13 small), with the inscription UNITED STATES OF AMERICA / ONE DOLLAR surrounding. The edge is plain. This issue also is known as Judd-60.

Mint records relate that 1,000 1836-dated coins were delivered on December 31, 1836, and an additional 600 1836-dated coins on March 31, 1837. Most of the 1,600 1836 Go-brecht dollars were put into circulation at face value.

Complicating matters somewhat is the Act of January 18, 1837, which changed the authorized weight of the silver dollar from the earlier 416-grain standard to 412.5 grains. It is logical to presume that any 1836-dated Gobrecht dollars struck before January 18, 1837, would have weighed 416 grains, as would any struck later on planchets made before January 18. Any coins struck after January 18 on newly made planchets should weigh 412.5 grains. On the 1839 version, there are 13 stars in the obverse field, no stars on the reverse, and the edge is reeded. The authorized weight is 412.5 grains. Records indicate that 300 of these were made for circulation. This issue is known as Judd-104.

Thus, two "regular issue" Gobrecht dollars were made for circulation: the 1836 and 1839 die combinations just described. In addition, there are numerous pattern Gobrecht dollars dated 1836, 1838 and 1839 outside the scope of this column.

Die Alignments

R.W. Julian and Walter Breen have done much research in the National Archives and elsewhere and examined many coins. Julian devised a handy guide for determining die alignment. Breen's Complete Encyclopedia of U.S. and Colonial Coins (p. 434) gives details summarized below.

The die alignment of a given Gobrecht dollar falls into one of four categories. To test for Die Alignments I and III, hold the coin (obverse up) by its edge at 3 and 9 o'clock between the thumb and finger, rotate along this horizontal axis, and note the position of the eagle. If the eagle is belly up, test for die Alignments II and IV by holding the coin (obverse up) by the edges at 6 and 12 o'clock between thumb and finger, rotate along this vertical axis, and note the position of the eagle. These procedures will yield one of the four alignments below.

Die Alignment I: Eagle flies slightly upward ("onward and upward"), the two circular dots or pellets, one to each side of ONE DOLLAR, are level after rotation along the horizontal axis. This also is called "coin" alignment or "coin turn" and is used for most U.S. coins.

Die Alignment II: The reverse die of this alignment is oriented 180 degrees differently than Alignment I. This also is called "medal" alignment or "medal turn" and is used for many medals (but relatively few circulating U.S. coins). The eagle flies "onward and upward" to the left, and the two ornaments flanking ONE DOLLAR are level after rotating it along the vertical axis.

Die Alignment III: The eagle flies horizontally, thus the two pellets on each side of ONE DOLLAR are not level (the one on the left is lower) after rotating it along the horizontal axis.

Die Alignment IV: The eagle flies horizontally as in Die Alignment III, after rotating along the vertical axis.

Originals vs. Restrikes

Now to the puzzle. Conventional wisdom has it that original 1836 Gobrecht dollars of the 1,000 delivered on December 31, 1836, weigh 416 grains and are of Die Alignment I. No problem here. Conventional wisdom also has it that the 600 pieces delivered on March 31, 1837, weigh 412.5 grains and are of Die Alignment II. There is a big problem here, as studies of extant specimens conducted by specialists James C. Gray, Andrew W. Pollock and the author show that if an 1836 Gobrecht dollar is not a Die Alignment I, it is likely to be of Die Alignment IV.

To be more specific, the following scenario seems to represent the truth. In a letter dated May 14, 1992, Gray stated, "As pointed out in your Norweb III catalog, it appears that 1836 pieces with Die Alignment IV were struck on 416-grain planchets. The piece in my collection is lightly circulated and was Lot 3035 of your Ezra Cole Collection Sale; it weighs 413.3 grains. It would be most interesting if one of these coins were subjected to scientific analysis and found to be .8924 fine silver, which of course would mean that they conform to the pre-1837 standard. If this is true, then it would be very unlikely that these coins were struck in the 1850s and 1860s when it is believed that restrikes were made. It is my feeling that these coins are indeed the March 1837 issue struck on planchets left over from the December 1836 striking of original Gobrecht dollars . . .

"All 1836 Gobrechts I have seen from Die Alignment III have been [Proof-60 or finer] and have had a cracked reverse die, and I feel that these coins are clearly restrikes."

Survey results

A survey taken by Pollock of 24 specimens of 1836 Gobrecht dollars passing through the hands of Auctions

by Bowers and Merena from 1989 through mid 1992 shows these results: Alignment I: 16 coins = 67 percent of population. Alignment II: 1 coin = 4 percent. Alignment III: 1 coin = 4 percent. Alignment IV: 6 coins = 25 percent. The sample is too small to be statistically precise, especially with regard to Alignments II and III with only one coin each, but the difference in rarity between Alignments I and IV is readily apparent.

It is believed that 1,000, plus another 600 coins (1,600 total), were struck in 1836 and by March 31, 1837, with the 1836 date. Not considering Alignments II and III, which are rare today and may have been struck after March 31, 1837, if the populations of Alignment I (16 coins) and Alignment IV (6 coins) in this survey are considered together, the following results can be determined. Alignment I: 16 coins = 73 percent of population. Alignment IV: 6 coins = 27 percent of population. This compares to the following proportions of the number of 1836-dated Gobrecht dollars struck in 1836 (1,000) and in 1837 up to March 31 (600) as follows: 1836 coinage: 1,000 coins = 62.5 percent of 1,600 total struck; early 1837 coinage, 600 coins = 37.5 percent of 1,600 total struck. Obviously, there is some type of correlation here. Further detailed research of extant coins will permit us to refine the figures.

Die Alignments of 1836 Dollars

1) Die Alignment I. Original. Issue of December 31, 1836: Breen-5412; Julian-3. Obverse: Figure of Liberty seated on a rock, C. GOBRECHT F. on base. No stars in field. Reverse: Eagle flying onward and upward in starry field. Plain edge. Authorized weight: 416 grains. 1,000 struck. Delivered December 31, 1836. 600 deposited in the Bank of the United States (Philadelphia) and went into circulation, 400 remained at the Mint for presentations and small orders (Julian). About 60 to 70 percent of the known specimens are of this variety. Many surviving pieces (about 85 percent) show signs of wear or contact sufficient to merit a grade below Proof-60. At the same time, most high-grade proofs of 1836 Gobrecht dollars are apt to be of Alignment I (more were saved as souvenirs and by collectors than Alignment IV), even more than allowed for by the total population estimate.

The approximate population in existence today of 1836 Gobrecht dollars is as follows, VF-20 to Proof-58: 550 to 750 pieces; Proof-60 to -63, 100 to 200; Proof-64 or finer, 35 to 50. Approximately 60 percent are of Die Alignment I and 40 percent of Die Alignment IV.

1a) Die Alignment I. As preceding, but coined to the standard of January 18, 1837, of 412.5 grains. Struck after implementation of the Act of January 18, 1837. A few have been reported (per Pollock); 5 to 8 known?

2) Die Alignment II: Breen-5413; Julian-4. Authorized weight 412.5 grains; unworn specimens vary slightly up to ± 1 grain. Issue date not known, but after implementation of the Act of January 18, 1837, and before restrikes were made from the later-cracked reverse die (see Die Alignment III, below). Studies by Pollock, Gray and others suggest a mintage of 200 (Pollock) to 250 (Gray) pieces, in contrast to the 600 some believe were minted. Struck from uncracked reverse die. Usually seen without evidence of circulation; nearly all have been Proof-60 or finer, indicating that they were probably struck for collectors; possibly an early restrike (certainly made prior to Die Alignment III, described below). Cf. Lot 1753 of the Somerset Collection, Auctions by Bowers and Merena, June 1992. Estimated 20 to 40 known.

3) Die Alignment III. Restrike: Breen-5414, Julian 11. Restruck, possibly 1858-60 and/or 1867-69. Weight: 412.5 grains, but apt to vary considerably. The repunching on 83, clear on originals, gradually fades out. Later impressions are from repolished dies. The reverse developed cracks through OLLA and NITED STATES O. Earlier restrikes have a raised line from the upper edge of the eagle's wing pointing between A and T of STATES. Later restrikes, made after the reverse die was repolished, no longer show the line pointing between A and T, but do show another line from the upper edge of the wing pointing to O in OF. In this die state both die cracks are longer and plainer than on earlier restrikes. Very rare; nearly all Proof-60 or finer. Estimated 20 to 40 known.

1836 Gobrecht dollar, hypothetically arranged to illustrate Die Alignment II.

4) Die Alignment IV. Second original. Issue of March 31, 1837: Breen-5414, Julian 12. Weight 416 grains; struck on planchets prepared before implementation of the Act of January 18, 1837. (Also see 4a below.) These probably were included in the delivery of 600 pieces on March 31, 1837. The reverse was struck from an uncracked die. They are nearly always seen with signs of wear, indicating that they were made for circulation. High-grade proofs are rarer than Alignment I. Very few high-grade proofs exist.

4a) Die Alignment IV. Second original. Issue of March 31, 1837. As preceding, but struck on a 412.5-grain planchet prepared after implementation of the Act of January 18, 1837.

As noted above, the approximate population in existence today of 1836 Gobrecht dollars is as follows: VF-20 to Proof-58, 300 to 500 pieces; Proof-60 to -63, 130 to 250; Proof-64 or finer, 50 to 75. Approximately 60 percent to 70 percent are of Die Alignment I and 30 percent to 40 percent of Die Alignment IV (combined 4 and 4a).

Note concerning weights of Die Alignment IV coins: Actually, observed weights have been in a continuum between 412.5 and 416 grains (with slight allowances for wear in instances of circulated coins), and it is evident that while some coins were probably struck on 416-grain planchets and others on 412.5-grain planchets, many were struck on planchets of intermediate weight, with actual examples on unworn coins including 415.2 and 413.4 grains.

Gobrecht Dollars of 1839

In 1860, James Ross Snowden noted in his book, The Cabinet Collection of the Mint of the United States, "1839. A dollar, of the same type as the pattern dollar of the previous year, was struck. The Director's Report of that time states that 300 of these were coined, but we have been unable to find any memorandum to that effect on any of the Mint Records, where it should properly appear, if such were the case. They are not as rare as the dollars of 1838, and the coinage was probably more extensive."

The attribution of die alignments of 1839-dated Gobrecht dollars to original and restrike issues given below differs from that in earlier print. Conventional wisdom has it that originals are of Alignment I and restrikes are of Alignment IV. In preparing a revisionist view, Larry Briggs comments "My own personal notation and brief on 1839 Gobrecht dollars is this: From 1986 until late 1991 I searched for a so-called 'original' 1839 specimen for a client. In that span I looked at 43 different(?) coins; two 'originals' and 41 'restrikes.' Of the so-called restrikes, 39(!) were impaired (holed, holed and repaired, mounted, or with field repairs of some sort) and/or were in circulated grades from VG to Proof-50, with most in VF grade levels. My personal opinion is that the so-called restrikes are actually originals, and 'originals' are really the restrikes. I find it very hard to accept the statement that restrikes issued for collectors were in almost 98 percent of my findings spent or holed or looped for keepsakes. It makes more sense to me that these items were actually originals and were saved during the several decades after they were made, whereas actual restrikes would mostly still be in high Proof grades and undamaged. This view is shared by several of my colleagues."

Gray writes, "As for 1839 Gobrecht dollars, Walter Breen states on page 436 of his Encyclopedia that originals have Die Alignment I and restrikes have Die Alignment III and may exist in Die Alignment IV. With all due deference to Walter's research, I feel that this is not the case. I have examined, or seen fully cataloged, approximately twenty (20) 1839 Gobrecht dollars, and all of them have been in Die Alignment IV. It is possible that Walter misread his notes and meant to say that restrikes existed in Die Alignment IV and may exist in Die Alignment III.

"I have never seen a single piece dated 1839 in Die Alignment I or Die Alignment III, and about 90 percent of the 20 pieces I have seen in Die Alignment IV have been circulated. In addition, 1839 Gobrecht dollars in Die Alignment IV appear one time for every three appearances of 1836 original Gobrecht dollars, which is about in proportion to their stated mintages. Given the high circulation rate of the 1839s in Die Alignment IV and their appearance about one-third as often as 1836 original dollars, it is my feeling that these coins are indeed the circulating issue of 1839."

Breen responded to the above, "On the 1839 Gobrechts, it is absolutely essential, if we are ever to settle the question of which are originals, which are restrikes, to examine many in both these groups for reverse die state. Originals, whatever the grade, should be from earlier die states; restrikes, whatever the grade, from the later states. Originals should be earlier than the die state of any Judd-105 . . . The evidence that would convince me is die states: is there even one Alignment I piece with heavier cracks on the reverse than Alignment III or IV coins? I haven't seen one, but I'm certainly willing to look. I have no emotional commitment one way or the other—primarily curiosity. We are only beginning to learn about Gobrechts; your comments . . . are a good effort in the right direction, and that same intensive analysis of die states for others (most of all 1838-9) will someday enable a future researcher to establish an absolute chronology . . ."

In other words, Breen has an open mind on the subject and stands ready to change his earlier views should new findings be convincing. The following analysis-distribution is based upon information from Briggs, Gray, Pollock and others.

Die Alignments of 1839 Gobrecht Dollars

1) Die Alignment I. Restrike: Breen-5421; Julian-25; Judd-104. Obverse: Seated Liberty. Thirteen stars around upper border. No Gobrecht signature or inscription. Reverse: Eagle flying onward and upward in plain field. Silver. Reeded edge. The alignment earlier called "original," but now believed to be a later restrike. Exceedingly rare; in fact, may not exist. Pollock was able to find no confirmed auction appearances, and only one tentative appearance (Superior's sale of the Ebsen Collection, May 1987, Lot 1934; may be Alignment III). In the course of examining leading pattern collections and corresponding with specialists, he has not learned of the existence of even a single specimen.

2) Die Alignment II: Reeded edge. No information available. Does this exist? In the course of examining leading pattern collections and corresponding with specialists, Pollock has not learned of the existence of even a single specimen.

3) Die Alignment III. Restrike: Reeded edge. In the course of examining leading pattern collections and corresponding with specialists, Pollock has not learned of the existence of even a single specimen. On the other hand, plain edge coins (Judd-105; restrikes) appear on the market occasionally.

4) Die Alignment IV. Original: Breen-5422; Julian 27. Reverse die without cracks. 300 struck, most of which were put into circulation. Nearly all seen today show evidence of wear. Nearly all of the worn pieces are of Alignment IV.

4a) Die Alignment IV. Restrike: Breen-5422; Julian 27. Later (1858 or later) use of the dies of Alignment 4, now repolished and with reverse cracks. Nearly all of the Proof-60 or finer pieces are of Alignment IVa. Estimated population of 1839 dollars: VF-20 to Proof-58 (nearly all are Alignment IV), 100 to 150; Proof-60 to 63 (nearly all are Alignment IVa), 50-75; Proof-64 or better (almost all Alignment IVa), 15-30.

How You Can Help

If you own one or more 1836 or 1839 Gobrecht silver dollars of the types described above, you can contribute to the database being built on the series. You will receive a credit line in the new book when it is published. Here is the information I would like for each coin:

- 1) Die alignment (I, II, III or IV).
- 2) Weight in grains (a druggist can weigh your coin; the coin must not be in a slab or holder).
- 3) Grade (if the coin shows signs of wear).
- 4) Detailed notations concerning any repunching of numerals, letters, etc., on obverse or reverse. High magnification is required, and such repunching may be visible only on coins grading Proof-60 or finer.

5) Detailed notations concerning any die cracks, however tiny. Cracks must be examined under high magnification.

Notes concerning a specimen of 4a in Auctions by Bowers and Merena's Somerset Sale, May 1992 (earlier in Stack's Garrett Sale, 1976, Lot 255): Weight: 411.9 grains. Die Alignment IV.

Obverse: Repunching on fifth star, particularly noticeable on the left side, where an undertype point appears slightly to the right of the regular point; repunching on eighth star, below the rightmost star point a "ghost" point in the form of a triangle is seen in the field, barely touching the star.

Reverse: Hairline die break through tops of MERI; break begins in the field below the denticles at the upper right of the first A in AMERICA and goes downward to touch the left side of the letter M, continuing through the tops of MERI. Along the denticles beginning above the right of the last S in STATES and continuing for much of the space between S and O (of OF) is a tiny, raised die irregularity running parallel to the denticles. A tiny die break, microscopically visible, connects the tops of NIT; no thorn on D of UNITED. Some diagonal die finish lines slope down to the right from the denticles above IT of UNITED.

I sincerely appreciate any and all help received. Address your letter to me as follows: Dave Bowers, Gobrecht Research Project, Box 1224, Wolfeboro, NH 03894, Fax: 603/569-5319 •

The Buffalo and the Battleship

IN 1897 THREE giants assumed important positions in Washington, D.C.: Theodore Roosevelt became assistant secretary of the Navy, Marcus W. Baldwin joined the engraving department at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP), and Pablo, a big, bull buffalo, came to the National Zoological Park. One would be immortalized on a United States $10 "legal tender" note, a bill that was issued in preference to a $10 silver certificate bearing an engraving of the battleship Massachusetts (see the April 1992 issue of The Numismatist, p. 522).

It has been estimated that at the turn of the 19th century, as many as 34 million American bison, or buffalo

(the term preferred by most Americans), roamed freely in what is now the United States and the lower portions of Canada. By 1889 William T. Hornaday—zoologist, big game hunter, chief taxidermist for the Smithsonian Institution and, at one time, director of the Bronx Zoological Park —could account for only 85 free-ranging buffalo, although a few hundred populated Yellowstone and other areas of the West. By 1901, when the "buffalo bill" was issued, only 25 buffalo resided in Yellowstone National Park, even though a law had been passed in 1894 that forbade their killing.

The Plains Indians looked upon the buffalo as a friend and god. They also relied on it for their existence; however, they killed only out of necessity, and then made use of every scrap of flesh, sinew, bone, horn and hide.

So it was not the Indian who drove the buffalo to near extinction, it was the "paleface" hunter who killed only for hide and horns to satisfy domestic and European demand. In addition, from the windows of trains, thousands of these magnificent animals were slaughtered for pleasure.

A western vacation with naturalist John Muir, where he saw the near extinct buffalo, probably changed big-game-hunter Teddy Roosevelt to an environmentalist-conservationist. The few in Washington who were concerned about the buffalo (and I feel confident that Roosevelt was among them) must have had enough influence to bump the battleship in favor of the buffalo. Now a model was needed.

Hornaday wrote about a buffalo he killed during a hunt in Montana on December 6, 1886. This 2,100-pound bull, along with three other buffalo, were mounted to suggest a bison family and placed on display in the Smithsonian Institution. While Marcus W. Baldwin (1853-1925) was attempting to sketch the large, mounted buffalo, wildlife artist Charles R. Knight passed by and noticed the difficulty Baldwin was having.

Knight (1874-1953), who later painted murals for the Museum of Natural History in New York City, offered to help. Baldwin took him to the BEP, and after a discussion with J.R. Hill, chief of the Engraving Division, Knight went to the National Zoo, where Pablo was in residence. (Another version of the story has the artist meeting Baldwin at the zoo, where the latter was having difficulty in capturing the buffalo in the desired position.)

Pablo's pose, as seen on the $10 note, is precisely the same as that of the mounted specimen at the Smithsonian, although this seems to be an innate, classical stance taken by all buffalo. (A George Catlin painting in his North American Indian Portfolio shows a buffalo in the same position.)

The Hornaday specimen, which the zoologist claimed was the model for the $10 note, could have been the genesis of the famous engraving, but Pablo probably just helped Knight and Baldwin create a lifelike image.

The portraits of explorers Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, engraved by G.F.C. Smillie, flank the rendering of Pablo. The choice of portraits must have pleased Roosevelt.

There is always demand for nice examples of this beautiful note. The number of notes issued, for each of nine different signature combinations, ranges from 5,760,000 to 101,000,000. Nevertheless, the collector value of all notes of this type, the signatures notwithstanding, is about the same.

Roosevelt was named honorary president of the American Bison Society, which was organized in 1905. Pablo, who had been purchased for $500 from Michel Pablo of Ronan, Montana, lived at the National Zoo until his death in 1914. Theodore Roosevelt died five years later.

We know that Roosevelt was responsible for engaging Augustus Saint-Gaudens to design American coins. Although there is no proof, it is very likely that he was instrumental in placing a buffalo, instead of a battleship, on one of our most beautiful bank notes.

BRONZES OF MITHRADATES VI OF PONTUS

Mithradates VI Eupator Dionysos (120-63 B.C.), king of Pontus on the southern shore of the Black Sea, was the last Hellenistic king to be wholly independent of Rome. At the height of his power, he ruled an empire that extended from the Crimea to the north, to Byzantium to the southwest, Colchis to the southeast, and Cappadocia to the south. Regarding Mithradates as a threat to her authority in the East, Rome fought three bitter wars (89-85 B.C., 83-82 B.C., and 74-63 B.C.) to subdue this proud monarch, who committed suicide rather than submit to Roman authority. The most infamous example of the savagery of these wars occurred in 88 B.C. In an effort to totally eradicate Roman influence in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), Mithradates ordered the slaughter of all Romans and Italians and their families in the cities under his control. Known as the "Asian Vespers," the massacre claimed between 80,000 and 150,000 people between those two worlds.

Mithradates, whose family origins can be traced to Persian nobility, claimed descent from Darius I of Persia and from Alexander the Great and Seleucus I. By claiming this dual descent, Mithradates presented himself to his Asiatic subjects as the eastern king foretold in prophecies who would drive out the invaders from the West (i.e. the Romans), and to his Greek subjects as the champion of hellenism against the Roman barbarians. Portraits of the king depicted him as the new Alexander.

Bronze coins issued by the cities under Mithradates' control bore the themes of the king's propaganda. The hero Perseus figures prominently on this coinage. Perseus, slayer of the Gorgon Medusa, was claimed as an ancestor both by Alexander the Great and by the kings of Persia. Ares, the Greek god of war also appears on the bronzes, as does Nike, goddess of Victory. The appearance of these two divinities from the Greek pantheon on the coinage of Mithradates was especially appropriate to a king whose lifetime was largely spent waging war in the pursuit of victory over the Romans. Thus, these bronzes symbolized Mithradates links to the Greek and Persian worlds and his attempt to be a bridge between those two worlds.

Due to a recent purchase, we are able to offer two major types of these interesting bronzes. These types were struck at a number of cities in the kingdom, such as the port of Amisus on the southern shore of the Black Sea.

RED LABEL FOR "PROBLEM" COINS

(actual size)

JULY 1992

Beginning Today: When you submit coins... every one of them will be graded and encapsulated. Never before has any grading service offered such extensive attention to your coins. Coins without any problems will continue to be graded and holdered with the premium "old-familiar" GREEN INSERT LABEL. Coins with problems will now be graded and holdered with the new certified RED INSERT LABEL. These will be graded with the problem described and printed below the grade. Collectors and dealers can now get their coins graded, certified and slabbed even if the coin has a problem.

You make the choice between other grading services and PCI. And when you do please consider the following reasons that make the difference:

- (1). PCI only charges $7.50 per coin (plus postage, etc.) to grade, authenticate, encapsulate and to process your order regardless of its value. Compare this to $26 or $22 or even $12!

- (2). More collectors, dealers, individuals and banks (over 4100 total) have submitted coins to PCI than any other grading service. We challenge any grading service to match our record beginning the day we opened on June 1, 1989 until now!
- (3). Our standard express "turn-around" time from the day we receive your coins to the day we ship them out is 6 working days. At all of the other services this will cost you a minimum of $26! Our price is $7.50.
- (4). Anyone may submit coins to PCI at the same low rates. The 3 other major grading services have formed exclusive dealer networks... thereby restricting who may get coins graded. Why do you think they charge so much? It's obviously money in the dealers pocket not yours! No longer do you have to go through an "in-crowd" to get consistently graded coins. It's your private business!

- (5). Every genuine dated coin you now submit (except plugged, holed, altered or undistinguishable) will be encapsulated in either the GREEN LABEL or RED LABEL slab. Collectors know that coins in slabs are generally worth more and now you can get in on the profits. PCI does reserve the right to refuse to encapsulate any coin for any reason it feels would be detrimental to the numismatic industry.
- (6). Any purchaser or submitter of a PCI coin who believes their coin(s) is misgraded, improperly attributed, or has questionable authenticity may resubmit the slab for a re-evaluation and/or reslabbing. The resubmitted process of evaluation and/or reselling will be paid for by PCI (excluding return postage and insurance which you pay).

6 DAY EXPRESS SERVICE SLAB SUBMITTAL FORM

Coin will be shipped on or before the 6th working day after we receive them and will be sent U.S. Registered Mail.

Happy New Member

ANA Membership Director Kim Dixon recently received a warm thank-you letter from new junior ANA member Elissa Meyerson of Newark, Delaware. When the 12-year-old told Dixon that her parents would pay for her first-year ANA membership as a birthday present, Dixon responded by sending her a birthday surprise—a second year of membership free.

Meyerson told all her friends and urged them to join, too. She wrote the following poem explaining why:

Nice Coin People

Kim made me feel so special in a nice collecting way.
The ANA is exciting fun, and I'm a new member today!!

If everyone could be this friendly,
the world could be at peace.
Coin collecting could lead the way.
It sets an example—at least.

And so I'm happy to be a part of the nicest group I found and thank the people who understand
"sharing hobbies" are good to be around.

YNs Preside at Special Meeting of New York Club

To encourage participation and give young collectors experience in club leadership, New York's Oswego County Numismatic Association held a special junior member night in place of its regular monthly meeting in April. The business meeting was conducted in the usual manner by junior officers—President B.J. Marshall, Vice President Dave Larson, Secretary Tom Greco and Treasurer Mike Borzumate. An auction with all lots priced at $3 or less followed, and door prizes were given away.

YN Auction a Grand Finale to Summer Conference

By Wednesday, July 15, the ANA Summer Conference was winding down. Friends had been made, and phone numbers exchanged. The only major item left on my agenda was the YN Auction that evening.

When Bill Fivaz began auctioning off the lots, I knew the auction would be fun. When Anthony Swiatek started outbidding himself and donated a lot he had just purchased, I had a feeling it would be more than fun.

Within an hour, Bill Fivaz decided to donate an original "Bo" hobo nickel, which sold for $300. Another "Bo" nickel was purchased for $400 by the Fine and Dime, owned by Wayne Sherbert. Wayne managed to amaze me all night with his generosity, but really did the incredible when he purchased a Saint-Gaudens gold piece. He had just consigned the coin, donating it in the names of his grading instructors—Mary Sauvain, Bill Fivaz and Len Albrecht. That single action brought $360.

When all the money was in and consignors paid, we had taken in $3,000, shattering last year's record of $940. The money is used to sponsor summer conference scholarships for young numismatists, covering tuition, airfare, and room and board. This year, 20½ scholarships were awarded at a cost of approximately $1,000 each. They were underwritten by clubs and individuals as well as the ANA.

Once they arrive in Colorado Springs, young collectors study beside "senior" numismatists, selecting from a wide range of courses. I have a feeling that the most difficult task for the YNs is choosing which course to attend.

On behalf of all the YNs, I would like to thank all who make these trips possible. They truly are a wonderful experience—one we wouldn't be able to enjoy without your support.

If you would like to donate money toward YN Summer Conference scholarships or numismatic items for the YN Auction at next year's conference, contact ANA Educational Services Director James Taylor, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, telephone 719/632-2646.

Colorado Springs Clubs Sponsor Boy Scout Merit Badge Clinic

Forty Boy Scouts from Colorado's Pikes Peak Council spent the afternoon of Saturday, July 11, completing requirements for their Coin Collecting Merit Badge. Held for the second year by the Colorado Springs Numismatic Society and Colorado Springs Coin Club in conjunction with the clubs' annual coin show, the clinic featured ANA Authenticator J.P. Martin, who discussed grading, counterfeits and altered coins.

During a break before exams were given, the Scouts had time to ask questions, visit the coin show, and look

All was quiet concentration during the examination given at the end of the Coin Collecting Merit Badge Clinic held by two Colorado Springs coin clubs in July.

Three YNs Win Scholarships to Summer Conference

Christopher Ganger of Ithaca, New York, John Kraljevich Jr. of Pottstown, Pennsylvania, and Vicken Yegparian of Toms River, New Jersey, attended the ANA Summer Conference in Colorado

Springs in July as recipients of scholarships funded by Bill Fivaz and J.T. Stanton, authors of The Cherrypickers' Guide to Rare Die Varieties. The three were chosen through a contest whereby young numismatists submitted to the authors coins that they "cherrypicked" (choice coins found by searching through dealers' junk boxes or regular stock, or traded or purchased from unknowledgeable collectors).

Entries were judged on rarity, condition and subjective value. Fivaz and Stanton report that "we had more submissions than we expected. It's a shame that all could not be awarded a scholarship, as each and every YN who participated would have been an excellent candidate."

The authors hope other members of the numismatic community will follow their lead and develop programs to send worthy YNs to the ANA Summer Conference, which, they maintain, is "by far the best educational value in numismatics today."

A number of YN summer conference scholarships are offered by the ANA and other groups. For more information about scholarship opportunities for YNs, write to James Taylor, ANA Educational Services Director, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. ■

Are You a Scholar of Dollars?

by Cecilia K. Whittenberger

How many $1 bills have you seen? Probably quite a few. But, did you ever look at one closely? Pull one out, and let's see how well you know your dollars.

First, look at the side printed in green ink, called the "back" of the note. (Paper money collectors use the terms "face" and "back" for the two sides of a note, just as coin collectors use the terms "obverse" and "reverse" for the front and back of a coin or medal.) Within two large circles are both sides of our nation's Great Seal. The circle at the left shows the reverse of the Great Seal.

Carefully count the levels of the incomplete pyramid, a symbol of the strong foundation the 13 original states created for the future growth of our nation. The eye inside the floating triangle above the pyramid is called the "Eye of Providence" or "Eye of God," representing our ability to gather knowledge. The Roman numerals MDCCLXXVI at the bottom of the pyramid recall the date 1776, the year the Declaration of Independence was signed.

Now count the olive leaves, olive berries, and the arrows in the eagle's talons. There are 13 of each. Arrows show our power to make war, while the olive branch is a symbol of peace. A quick count of the vertical stripes on the eagle's breastplate also totals 13, standing for the 13 original colonies. Did you realize that the rectangle above the stripes stands for one, united congress? The 13 stars above the eagle's head represent our new nation taking its place among other nations.

It took three committees six years to design both sides of the Great Seal shown on our dollar bill. At first they chose a European eagle with its wings down. If Benjamin Franklin had gotten his wish, the national bird would have been a turkey! He also suggested a depiction of Moses closing the Red Sea on Pharaoh's army. Thomas Jefferson wanted a picture of the Israelites following clouds of fire through the wilderness. John Adams preferred Hercules.

Numbers and Letters Denoting Federal Reserve Banks

1 A Boston	7 G Chicago
2 B New York	8 H St. Louis
3 C Philadelphia	9 I Minneapolis
4 D Cleveland	10 J Kansas City
5 E Richmond	11 K Dallas
6 F Atlanta	12 L San Francisco

Now notice the words IN GOD WE TRUST, the official motto of the United States. President Theodore Roosevelt tried to have God's name removed from all money in 1907, but Congress overrode his objections. On July 11, 1955, President Eisenhower signed an act requiring that "In God We Trust" be placed on all of our nation's paper money.

There also are several Latin phrases on the back of the dollar. The inscription ANNUIT COEPTUS means "He [God] has favored our undertaking." NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM translates "A new order of the ages," and E PLURIBUS UNUM means "one out of many" or "one composed of many." These sayings express our forefathers' feelings about their new country.

Flip your dollar over, and you'll notice that this side, the face, is printed with black ink. George Washington's portrait is in the center, and in each corner is a differently framed numeral 1. Across the top are the words FEDERAL RESERVE NOTE—all U.S. paper money produced today is released into circulation through a system of 12 Federal Reserve Banks.

Small, black letters at the top left state THIS NOTE IS LEGAL TENDER, meaning the dollar bill must be accepted anywhere in the United States as payment for debts. Years ago, many banks printed their own money, but upon demand couldn't always exchange the bills for precious metals. People then became cautious about which bills were safe to accept. Now, only the U.S. government produces, regulates and backs our money, so each bill can safely be used for payments.

The large letter at the center of the Federal Reserve Seal, located to the left of Washington's portrait, denotes which Federal Reserve Bank issued the bill. Each bank also is represented by a number that is printed twice to the left and to the right of the central portrait. (See below for a list of numbers and letters and the Federal Reserve Banks they represent.) Matching serial numbers are printed at the left and right (each dollar has a unique set of serial numbers). A star in the last space of a serial number means that the bill is a replacement for one that has been destroyed during the printing process.

The Treasury Seal, to the right of Washington's portrait, usually is printed in green and features the "Scales of Justice," a key symbolizing authority, and the year the Department of the Treasury was established (1789).

To reduce counterfeiting, federal law forbids unauthorized production of the type of paper used in printing bills. Different inks on the face and back, and the detailed, lacy designs in the background also are meant to discourage counterfeiters.

Before putting your $1 Federal Reserve note away, how many dollar signs did you notice on it? Even though the symbol $ is used every day in monetary transactions, you'll find no dollar signs on your bill. Interestingly, no law requires that this symbol be used on U.S. paper money.

Now that you've carefully studied a dollar's markings and their meanings, you're well on your way to being a dollar scholar. Congratulations! ■

Mind Your Mints

by Marilyn Reback, ANA 129422

ANSWERS ON PAGE 1295

Establishment of the United States Mint was authorized 200 years ago this year, and construction was begun shortly thereafter on the first mint building in the city of Philadelphia. To meet the needs of the expanding nation, branch mints and other facilities were established in other cities. Shown below are six of the institutions that are or have been operated by the U.S. Mint. Use the accompanying clues to help identify each one.

1. Coins were not produced at this facility until 1906 because the new machinery to be used at the Mint was first sent to the St. Louis Exposition of 1904 for display.

2. This Mint building survived the devastating earthquake of 1906 and the fires that followed. For a time, it was the only financial institution able to conduct business in the city.

3. Among the operating expenses incurred at this U.S. Mint were food for the horses that provided power for the machinery, and $3 for a watchdog.

4. For part of the Civil War, Confederate armed forces used this Mint for office space. After the war, it was occupied for a time by officials of the Union Army.

5. A large amount of gold is stored in the vault of this Mint-controlled building, situated on property adjoining a military reservation. Scenes from the James Bond movie Goldfinger supposedly took place here.

6. It was believed that this branch mint would be conveniently located to coin the silver mined from the nearby Comstock Lode.

Outstanding YNs: Where Are They Now?

by Marilyn Reback, ANA 129422

Each year since 1968, the American Numismatic Association has named an Outstanding Young Numismatist of the Year. The recipients actively participated in the hobby—most often by exhibiting, writing, giving presentations, serving area coin clubs, taking part in the Roman Coin Project, or completing the ANA correspondence course. What has become of them since?

Looking back, what did this recognition mean to them, and how did their participation in the hobby help to shape their future? Some former top YNs pass along their thoughts on the award and how their involvement in the hobby has benefited them, and offer advice for today's young collectors.

Kurt Krueger

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1971

Kurt Krueger of Iola, Wisconsin, recalls that the trip to the 1971 ANA convention, where he was to receive the award, was "a great adventure, as an early mentor (Bill Fuchs), a friend and I drove to Washington, D.C. I had an overwhelming feeling of pride and accomplishment." He later was elected to and served on the ANA Board of Governors from 1977-86 and has been on the Central States Numismatic Society Board for the past 19 years.

Today Krueger owns a numismatic firm bearing his name. His company's auction division has grown to accommodate some 125 categories of collectibles, with a mailing list of 33,000.

According to Kurt, one of the reasons

there are few career numismatists is that "the profit motive and greed factor often drives prospective 'stars' away. You'll be a better person if the profit angle is not your first priority—respect those who have gone before you."

Paul R. Johnson

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1972

"I was really shocked, but very pleased to receive the award. It was a tremendous honor, which I will never forget," relates Paul Johnson. An active exhibitor in southern Ontario, Canada, he started a local YN club, then helped initiate a YN program for the Canadian Numismatic Association (CNA). He has served on the CNA executive board for ten years and as CNA vice president for two years, and currently serves as CNA education and library chairman.

As a YN in 1971, Kurt Krueger belonged to three coin clubs, one of which he founded. Since then, he has served 10 years on the ANA Board of Governors and today owns a numismatic auction company that bears his name.

"Numismatics prepared me much better for my working career and life as an adult," says the 40-year-old financial analyst. "My involvement gave me experience in public speaking, writing, time management, handling finances, becoming an organizer, and working with people. It also assisted my education in history, geography and economics."

Paul's collecting interests range from European architectural medals and medals with train themes to paper money of Iceland. He advises, "Numismatics is a hobby, and it should be fun—fun to obtain new material for your collection, to learn about the hobby, and to interact with other collectors. Young people should collect what they can afford. Try collecting by theme . . . it is much more interesting."

Mark B. Hotz

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1975

At the time he received the honor of Outstanding Young Numismatist, Mark

In 1975 Mark Hotz (left) worked for George and Doris Fuld after school. Today he operates Westminster Coins and Currency in Westminster, Maryland. Former Outstanding YN Larry Jackson (right) was named a Numismatic Ambassador at the Georgia Numismatic Association convention last May.

1979 Leonard Hecht

Hotz collected primarily ancient Roman coins and older European coinage. Today he still collects, with an interest in Roman portrait silver, Imperial Russian coinage and counterstamped coins.

As a teenager Mark worked after school for hobby great George Fuld and his wife, Doris. Since 1987, he has been a full-time coin dealer, attending shows as Mark Hotz Rare Coins and operating a retail location, Westminster Coins and Currency in Westminster, Maryland. The store specializes in collector coins, 19th-century U.S. material, world coins, ancient coins, and U.S. and world currency.

Mark advises young collectors to learn as much as possible. "Knowledge is the key to success and enjoyment [of the hobby]. There are many nice dealers out there who would be happy to help out bright, interested young people.

Seek them out. Go about building your collection in a thoughtful manner; always be willing to branch into new areas. Try to stay away from the heavily promoted areas and [seek] items that are truly scarce."

Larry Jackson

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1976

When he was named ANA's Outstanding Young Numismatist, Larry Jackson recognized that he had obtained prominence in the hobby and [would] continue to excel." At the time, he had been dealing in coins for three years and was an active exhibitor.

Larry was and still is involved with local, state and regional numismatic organizations. On May 23, 1992, at the Georgia Numismatic Association convention, he received Krause Publications' coveted Numismatic Ambassador Award. He deals in rare coins, specializing in U.S. gold, and promotes two major coin shows in Atlanta each year.

Recommends Larry, "Enjoy the hobby for what it was originally intended—the fun of collecting and the attainment of knowledge, not just the investment aspect of it."

Lee S. Minshull

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1977

"I thought it was a tremendous honor to be recognized among outstanding young numismatists, especially considering the intense competition in my age group," recalls Lee Minshull. During the summer of 1977, he spent 2½ months working at the ANA in Colorado Springs. He also was president of the Ann Arbor (Michigan) Coin Club, attended 15 to 20 shows a year, and had his own rare coin business.

Today, Lee operates a rare coin company in Beverly Hills, California, specializing in better-date and generic U.S. gold and patterns. For 11 years prior, he was wholesale manager for Steve Ivy and Heritage Rare Coin Galleries in Dallas, and for three years he worked with Kevin Lipton Rare Coins in Beverly Hills.

YN Program Chairman Florence Schook poses with Lee Minshull at the Atlanta convention in 1977 (left), where he was named Outstanding YN. Today Lee is a rare coin dealer in Beverly Hills.

"One special area that still offers starting collectors a rich historical experience is U.S. colonials," says Lee. "Though rare, colonials are very reasonably priced, and allow collectors a unique opportunity to acquire a piece of early Americana."

To those who plan to pursue a career in coins, Minshull recommends "trying to position yourself with an existing medium-sized or major coin house. Today's market has changed from the market I grew up with in that it doesn't favor the small coin dealer as much. The small dealer is not as likely today as he was 15 years ago to get the big deals, unless he is very well connected."

Theodore Lopez

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1980

For Ted Lopez, his most outstanding memories of 1980 were attending the Summer Seminar at the ANA in Colorado Springs, winning the adult best-in-show award at the California State Numismatic Association convention, completing the Roman Coin Project, having an article published in The Numismatist, and receiving the ANA's Outstanding Young Numismatist award. "I believe my advantage as a junior member was that my family also was very active in the hobby," Ted explains. "My younger sister, Michelle, was the 100,000th member to join the ANA (I signed her up as part of the Roman Coin Project). We traveled to St. Louis for our first ANA convention together. We also attended many state conventions, which turned into weekend family outings.

"If more young people were able to spend this kind of time with their families, society as a whole would be better off. What a great experience!"

Now age 27, Ted reports that "starting and raising a family, continuing my graduate education in engineering, full-time work and community involvement takes most of my time. However, on occasion I still attend meetings of my local club, the San Bernardino County Coin Club, to visit old friends. My collection is still intact, and I add to it when I can."

"Remember," advises Ted, "coin collecting isn't only 'collecting coins.' There are many lessons to be learned through the hobby; take advantage of them."

Larry Gentile Jr.Outstanding Young Numismatist—1981

"I am still active, but not like I used to be. I still collect, but mostly share my knowledge with other people to interest them in coin collecting," reports Larry Gentile Jr. "I just finished four years in the U.S. Marine Corps and tried to spread numismatics to as many Marines as I could. I am now going to aeronautics school, and I am still talking about numismatics to all my buddies."

"I have my father (Larry Sr.) to thank for everything I have ever done and learned in numismatics," says

Matthew V. Rockman of San Francisco, California, was named the 1992 Outstanding Young Numismatist of the Year during the AmericANA Coin Show: A World's Fair of Money, held in Orlando, Florida, August 12-16. The 17-year-old numismatist holds membership in the American Numismatic Society, Royal Numismatic Society, Pacific Coast Numismatic Society and San Francisco Ancient Numismatic Society. He also serves as a governor of the Young Numismatists of America.

An accomplished exhibitor, he took five first-place exhibit awards at the 1990 and 1991 ANA conventions in Seattle and Chicago, as well as the Charles H. Wolfe Sr. Junior Best-of-Show Award in 1990. A number of Rockman's numismatic articles on ancient and British coinage have garnered literary awards from the ANA (including first- and second-place awards in this year's competition), the Pacific Coast Numismatic Society, the Numismatic Literary Guild, the Royal Numismatic Society and the Professional Numismatists Guild.

Larry. "I attended many coins shows, conventions and YN programs with my father. I was an avid exhibitor with more than 75 awards. I wrote articles and helped others get interested in the hobby."

If you are a young collector, "stay with it, don't give up," says Larry. "Buy the best you can afford. The hobby has to be fun for you—collect what you like and share whatever knowledge you have with others."

John Greenslet*Outstanding Young Numismatist—1983*

John Greenslet's thoughts on being named Outstanding Young Numismatist: "Everything I have done in the hobby, I did because it was fun and I enjoyed it. I thought it was pretty cool to get a national award for having fun." At the time, he was most active in exhibiting at local, state and national conventions.

Now studying for his master's degree in mechanical engineering, John doesn't have as much time for the hobby, but he still exhibits whenever he can. The 27-year-old is working on his collection of English coronation medals.

He has two pieces of advice. The first, learned from his father, Phil, and others, such as Steve Taylor, is that "exhibiting is half the fun of collecting! By building an exhibit, you learn a good bit about whatever you collect. It is a great source of satisfaction to teach someone else about your hobby." Secondly, "Choose a subject that really interests you, and learn as much as you can about it. When you buy something, always buy it because it interests you and not just because it is an investment. I find the hobby infinitely more appealing when I think of the historical and aesthetic value of my collection rather than looking just at the monetary value."

Barbara Stutzman

"I was very honored and privileged to receive this award. I had worked very hard," says Barbara Stutzman, "but if it hadn't been for my parents, Adolf Weiss, Florence Schook, Larry Gentile and many others who helped, guided and supported me, my dream never would have come true!" She wrote articles and exhibited, and was the first YN to serve as an ANA summer intern.

After high school, she worked for a year (weekends included) to earn money for college. Now, after receiving her degree, she works as a polymer chemist for an adhesives company in Glen Rock, Pennsylvania, and hopes to have more time for the hobby. "I miss all the friends I have made. A friend in numismatics is a friend for life!"

James R. Stoutjesdyk

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1987

As a YN, Jim Stoutjesdyk was an active speaker, exhibitor and writer, and worked part-time for a local dealer. He recalls that he "felt very honored, and a bit surprised, to have won the award. At the time, it was my greatest achievement in numismatics." He is now director of numismatic services for Superior Stamp & Coin Company in Beverly Hills, California.

"The activities I participated in as a YN have given me many great memories and helped prepare me for college and my career," says Jim. "I will never forget the experiences I had at the ANA summer seminars, and I have developed friendships that will last a lifetime."

Jim encourages YNs to "take advantage of every opportunity offered. Exhibit, write articles and give talks whenever you can. Most adult collectors will go out of their way to help YNs. Don't get discouraged."

Scott T. Rottinghaus

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1988

"Outstanding Young Numismatist had always been a goal for me," relates Scott Rottinghaus. "I was distinctly honored to win." Primarily a writer, he also spoke often and exhibited occasionally (he took the ANA's junior best-in-show exhibit award in Chicago last year). His main interests are Roman Republican silver, Roman Imperial silver and British milled silver coins.

"Get involved!" says Scott. "Even if you live in the country and don't get to the major shows, you can still make an important contribution to numismatics, particularly through writing and speaking about your favorite hobby."

He now serves as ANA District Delegate for Eastern Kansas. Scott also is a founder and current president of Young Numismatists of America, a group operated solely by dedicated young collectors.

Greg Lyon

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1989

"While I knew that I was up for the award, it was still a shock when I actually heard my name announced," remembers Greg Lyon. "I greatly enjoyed the time I spent in the hobby, but it's nice to have your efforts publicly acknowledged. I also felt that I had shown the numismatic community that YNs could be an active, involved part of the hobby." He exhibited at every show he attended, took part in YN programs whenever they were offered, wrote articles and went to local coin club meetings.

Several weeks after receiving the award, Greg started college, and his involvement in numismatics dropped off as a result. He still reads hobby publications to keep up to date, attends two or three shows a year, and exhibits at every opportunity. He also edits the YN Digest, the quarterly newsletter of the Young Numismatists of America.

Greg's best piece of advice for YNs is to focus on education. "No matter what your interests are, your best investment is to learn as much about numismatics as you can. This investment will pay you back in enjoyment (and perhaps in cash)." Remember, too, not to get discouraged. "Enjoy what you're doing, and success will come later."

Trevor Robins

Outstanding Young Numismatist—1991

"Delighted" to be named Outstanding Young Numismatist at last year's convention in Chicago, Trevor Robins of Xenia, Ohio, enjoys writing articles and giving talks at school and coin club meetings. Now 16 years old, he is investigating career prospects in numismatics, for he would "enjoy being able to earn a living in this field."

Trevor advises all new collectors to study their field of choice "before making any significant purchases. Save your money while you learn." ■

Collector Spotlight

John Kraljevich is a young numismatist on his way up. The 14-year-old Philadelphia youth has his priorities set and his numismatic game planned—collector, researcher, author, dealer.

Already dubbed “Tomorrow’s foremost numismatic scholar,” John graciously accepts the compliment and looks forward to the challenge.

“I’m pleased that others think of me in this way. I take it as a personal challenge—something I want to aspire to achieve,” he says. “I see someone like Q. David Bowers as my role model for the future.”

How far is the future?

“Ten years, when I’ve finished college and received a journalism degree and probably an MBA,” John says in his clear, straightforward manner.

To some observers, it may appear that John is a bit presumptuous and probably has bitten off more than he can chew. But his first seven years into numismatics have taken him from Europe to three consecutive ANA Summer Conference scholarships, several published research articles and a new theory on the Randall Hoard.

“I began collecting when I was on a trip to Europe with my parents in 1985,” John says. “I started with the foreign money we picked up in our travels. My dad added some coins he had plus some silver dollars my grandfather had given him. I then went to a country auction and bought two Susan B. Anthony dollars for $3—not a good buy, but I learned from the experience.”

John’s collecting has broadened to include more foreign, U.S., ancients—mostly Roman—early colonial coppers, Spanish silver and checks.

“One of the first things I did and advise others to do is to join your local coin club,”

John Kraljevich: A YN on His Way Up

by Stephen Bobbitt
ANA 143751

John says, almost in a rush of enthusiasm. “I belong to the West Chester Coin Club of Pennsylvania, where they have nurtured me and taught me things I wouldn’t have learned anywhere else.”

He also advises other young and emerging numismatists to “build your own numismatic library. It’s the most valuable part of your collecting. And don’t just leave the books on a shelf, but read them and do research.”

John’s investigations have allowed him to write several numismatic articles for such publications as The Commemorative Trail and the Young Numismatists Digest.

“I’ve come up with my own theories on the Randall Hoard, and I’m not afraid to stand up to the criticism I’ve received on them,” John says. “I don’t think it was simply a keg of loose change that ended up in the hands of John S. Randall in New York after the Civil War. My research indicates the keg of 20,000 coins originally was from the U.S. Mint and used for change, then buried, lost, discovered and came into Randall’s hands.” John will stand by his theory until someone can show him some empirical evidence to the contrary.

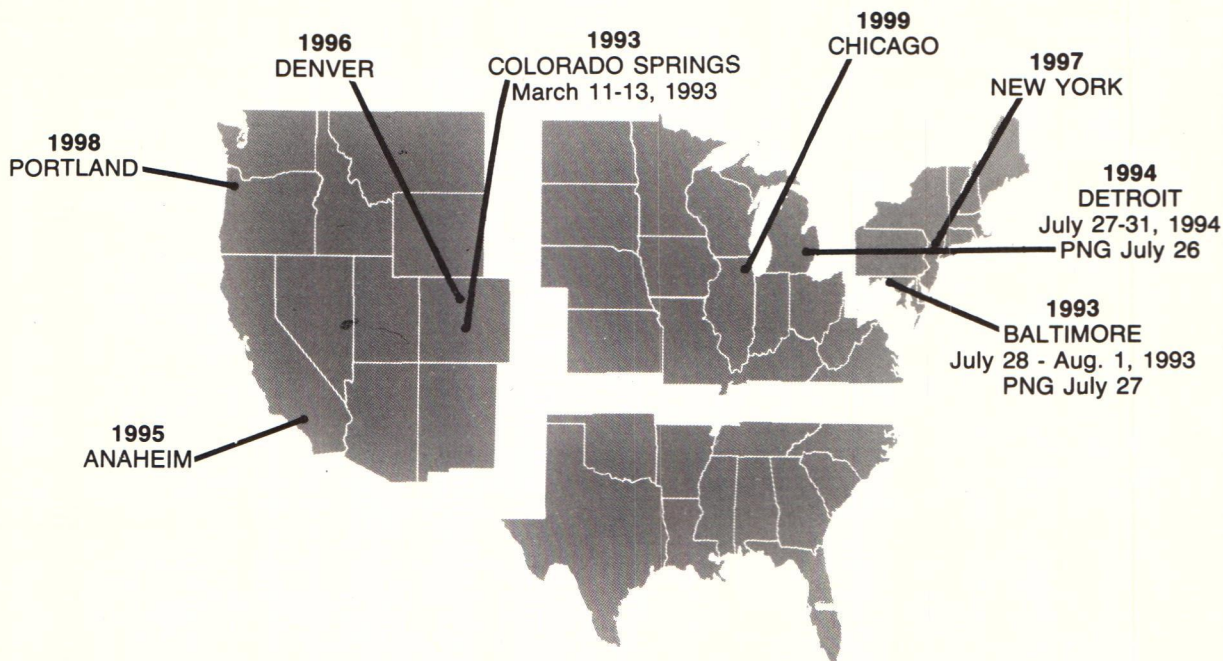

A student, all-around athlete and aspiring thespian at Malvern Preparatory School, John is the only numismatic collector and scholar in his family.

“I have an older brother and two older sisters,” he says. “They think my interest in numismatics is a little odd, but they’re very supportive. My dad tolerates it and encourages me, and my mom travels all over with me.”

John Kraljevich is sure to hit a grand slam home run on his journey upward in the wide world of numismatics. ■

Little-Known Facts about Imaginary Currencies

AS A DEDUCTION, it ranks far from brilliant. It just may be that the obvious lack of public interest in coinage redesign coincides with the demise of the obliquitous one-liners called "fillers."

Editors once used these short bits of information to complete newspaper columns that were a few lines short. In the days of hot-metal composition, typesetters could choose from a bank of preset fillers to justify column lengths without having to lead out the slugs of type. Such has now been rendered obsolete by computerized typesetting.

Tantalizing tidbits of numismatic knowledge provided filler readers with a readily accessible source of information to spark their latent interest in coins. Words about money have always proven to be an attention-getter, far more so than such bland statistics as "the human liver averages three pounds in weight," or "fleas jump over 200 times their body length."

The public was far more interested in learning that "the Lincoln cent was the first U.S. circulating coin to bear the portrait of a person" or that "'In God We Trust' first appeared on a 2-cent piece issued in 1864." Such items went a long way in informing the public that coins were more than just tokens to help facilitate trade.

I was surprised to learn that more than 3,500 newspapers, mostly small-town weeklies, still subscribe to filler services. Of two major firms still in the business of creating one-liners, one provides its services at no charge (to the

The fillers are paid for by individuals and firms seeking a line or two of publicity about themselves or their products. It is to the other company that we offer the suggestion to cover a numismatic area never before addressed—little-known facts about imaginary currencies.

Even professional numismatists may not be aware that:

- Currency of Cacklogallinia, an island in the Caribbean, is the spasma (equal to 10 English pence) and the rac-fantassine (approximately 3 to an English pound). (Brunt, S. A Voyage to Cacklogallinia: With a Description of the Religion, Policy, Customs and Manners of the Country, London: 1727).
- The currency of the Leap Islands, an archipelago of independent kingdoms near Antarctica, was not money, but promises, which have the advantage of being impossible to burn or steal (Cooper, James Fenimore. The Monikins, New York: 1835).

- The term "bit" was first applied to money 2,000 years ago in Uranopolis, a city on the peninsula of Acte in Chalcidice, to describe the drachma (Pliny the Elder. Naturalis Historia, Rome; 1st century A.D.).

- On Valapee or Isle of Yams, human teeth were used as the local currency. Teeth were extracted from young slaves. It also was a practice to extract the teeth of the deceased and distribute the "money" among the mourners (Melville, Herman. Mardi, and a Voyage Thither, New York: 1849).

- Xexotland, a primitive country southwest of the underground continent of Pellucidar, based its economy on octagonal bronze ingots (Burroughs, Edgar Rice. Return to Pellucidar, New York: 1941).

- Quivera, a country bordering the Republic of Independia in South America, identifies the portrait of Madoc on its coinage with the legend, MAD PRINCE, CIV. (Wilkins, Vaughn. The City of Frozen Fire, London: 1950).

- Contrary to pronouncements by the British Royal Mint, Bong-Treeland, a country of uncertain location, was the first to introduce "new" pence (Lear, Edward. The Owl and the Pussycat, London: 1871).

- The currency of Frivola, or Frivolous Island, in the Pacific was based on "agatines," pieces of agate used as coins (Coyer, Abbe Gabriel François. A Discovery of the Island of Frivola, London: 1750).

- It is impossible to do anything in Potato Bug Country without a ready supply of "fleems," the local currency (Sandburg, Carl. Rootabaga Stories, New York: 1922).

- The most obvious characteristic of the Aegean island of Xiros is that once seen, its image haunts travelers until they return. Unfortunately, returnees experience such utter bliss that after only a few hours, peaceful death overtakes them. This terminal experience, called "zahir," also can manifest itself in the form of an Argentina 20-cent piece (Borges, Jorge Luis. El Aleph, Buenos Aires: 1949).

- Calormen, a Mohammedan empire, is the only country to use "crescents" as a local currency. Although the country is so large it takes many weeks for mail to be delivered from one city to another, the cost remains 5 crescents for first-class letters sent via Imperial Post (Lewis, C.S. The Horse and His Boy, London: 1954).

- The discovery of metal on Mount Alkoe in Sas Doopt Swangeanti led to the introduction of the first currency for the island kingdom (Patlock, Robert. The Life and Adventures of Peter Wilkins, a Cornish Man. Taken from His Own Mouth, in His Passage to England from Off Cape Horn, in the Ship, Hector, London: 1783).

- Natives of Bachepousse, an island of the Chichi Archipelago, use golden flowers as money to pay for food and other goods imported from nearby islands (Pinget, Robert. Graal Flibuste, Paris: 1956).

- The charm of the basic currency of Fonseca, a Caribbean island discovered by two Turkish sea captains in 1707, is its indecipherable legends, which led to constant discord. Visitors wishing to avoid argument are advised to bring Spanish silver coin, which is accepted on a par with the deckled-edge pieces of paper used in native commerce (Anonymous. A Voyage to the New Island, Fonseca, Near Barbados, with Some Observations Made in a Cruise among the Leeward Islands. In Letters from Two Captains of Turkish Men of War, Driven Thither in the Year 1707, translated from Turkish and French, London: 1708).

From these random samplings, numismatists can readily appreciate how the average person could once again develop an interest in coins, should the obliquitous filler return to the pages of your local newspaper.

Ask about Those Dealer Credentials

MANY DEALERS REFER to their ANA membership in advertising and promotional pieces. They are proud of their commitment to the ANA bylaws and dealer code of ethics. When a dealer highlights his or her name and membership number in the ANA and other professional organizations, you have some assurance that this person is operating a well-run business and is reliable. And you have a means of checking up on the dealer.

The system is a good one. Each organization has special regulations that must be followed. If there are serious or frequent complaints about a member, there will be an investigation. If there are problems that cannot be resolved, the member can be suspended or expelled for failing to abide by the bylaws. The ANA even has an experienced mediation team to look into complaints to see if they can be resolved equitably before taking drastic action.

Most dealers are honest and want to please their customers. There are occasional misunderstandings and a few dealers who overgrade, overcharge or misrepresent the coins they sell, but dealers who have been in business any length of time and hold membership in the ANA, the Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG) or other professional groups usually are very reliable. The problem here, obviously, is how to tell if a dealer is well established and a member in good standing. Anyone can claim membership in these Associations and, for that matter, cite any other credentials. It is up to the customer to find out if this is true.

Fortunately for coin buyers, it is relatively simple to check up on dealers. Both the ANA and PNG will confirm membership in their organizations. All you have to do is telephone or write with the name or number of the member in question. You will be told if that dealer is a member in good standing, and how long the membership has been in effect. This information is not a guarantee that you will be completely satisfied in your dealings with that person, but it is a good indicator of past performance.

Serious problems arise when an advertiser claims membership, when in fact that person is not a member or, worse, has been expelled from membership. It happens; that was exactly the case with the last two people whose names were sent to me as having suspicious-sounding ads. These people do not advertise in the usual coin publications. They would be quickly discovered there. They run their ads in other newspapers and magazines, where they can catch the general public. Their membership affiliations sound impressive. If only people would check up on them, they could prevent future problems. Here are the numbers for quick reference: ANA Mediation Department, 719/632-2646; PNG, 818/781-0107.

This ad, which appeared in The Wall Street Journal, offered to sell $20 gold pieces at just about the price of an ounce of gold—not a bad deal for any double eagle. And, these people claimed to be members of the ANA and used some other impressive-sounding initials. The ad looked like it might be a loss leader to get new business.

The real scheme, one of our readers found out, was to get a potential buyer interested in low-priced coins and then explain that these were in such poor condition it would be advisable to buy some better-grade pieces. Of course, these coins were much higher in price—very much higher, in fact, and they were no bargains. It was nothing less than the old “bait and switch” game.

I called the advertisers to see for myself what was going on. They were cordial and smooth, but I explained that I didn’t want to buy any coins right now, I just wanted to verify their credentials. I asked for and received the name of the ANA member. They then promised to send me information about the company and give bank references.

I checked with the ANA Membership Department to verify the company officer’s claim. Guess what? The only person with that name had been expelled in 1976! He tried to re-apply for membership in 1983, but was discovered and bounced again. Now the matter is in the hands of the ANA’s general counsel for corrective action.

A friend called to tell me about the latest coin scam he heard on the radio. Using a radio ad is at least a new approach, but the pitch is the usual hype about how wonderful coins are as an investment. These people are way out of touch with the real market, because they are still using controversial and outdated data from the Salomon Brothers report. They would have you believe that coins have averaged a 24.5-percent increase each year for the past 35 years.

This company sent out literature and an audiotape to convince me not only that coins were the best past investment, but also that their future is even more promising. Many experts, they say, predict that coin prices will increase at a rate of 50 to 100 percent per year over the next five years. The best part of this, according to the literature, is that you can make all of this money with very low risk and little or no experience.

Their entire promotional package is nothing but a pack of lies. Much of it borders on being illegal and in violation of what the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) feels is deceptive or a "red flag" for false advertising. The promotional material says that buying coins is a completely confidential matter, with no government restrictions on moving coins into or out of the country, and that coin investments receive favorable tax treatment. It also says that profits can be channeled into upgrading your portfolio without taxation.

The clincher is their claim of membership in the ANA. I checked that out, and found that the member had been expelled. This case also was turned over to the ANA's general counsel for action. There is no room for promoters like these in the coin business. The harm they have done in the past 10 years has just about wrecked any investment potential for the market today. Let's hope that everyone who got this literature took time to check up on the membership claim.

File #312

This past month, three people alerted me to inaccuracies in advertising claims. They were all similar. The first is a promotion stating that readers would be given a silver dollar if they subscribed to a popular financial newsletter. No real problem there, except that the "silver" dollar pictured in the ad is a clad 1977 Eisenhower dollar. It is called a silver dollar throughout the ad, without any other explanation. Is this a simple mistake, or is it intended to deceive? I'd like to believe that they just don't know the difference. What do you think?

The problem with the other two ads

We organize four public auctions per year with alternately, on the one hand, ancient (Celtic, Greek and Roman), Byzantine and Oriental coins, and, on the other hand, Middle Ages and Modern Times coins as well as medals, tokens and paper money. We accept collections and coins of high quality. The schedule of our next auctions is as follows:

N°	Contents	Limit of acceptance	Auction's date is that they repeatedly refer to medals as coins. One is an elaborate promotion from a private mint that has a collection of medals called "American History In Your Hands." These commemoratives are attractive and of high quality, but they just aren't coins—no matter how many times they are called such in the ad, no matter how it is stated. These are not coins and never will be. They cannot be spent or used as money. I hope nobody buys one thinking that these are official U.S. commemorative coins. We have enough of those already.

The second offender in the misuse of the term "coin" is another private mint. No, I do not really believe that any of these places are real mints or that they have their own stamping equipment. I just use this term to let readers know that these companies have fancy-sounding names that include the word "mint."

This promotion sells a bronze medallion commemorating the Apollo XVII lunar mission. It's a decent-looking piece and not overpriced, but it is called a coin at every opportunity in the fancy brochure that goes along with it. I object to the piece being called a "great rarity and certain to be in demand by collectors." Small print at the bottom of the page says that mintage will not exceed 1 million.

Okay, for $4 nobody is going to get hurt with this piece. I can understand how these things happen. Ad writers either don't care or don't know that medals are not coins (or that clad dollars are not made of silver). Still there is something devious about implying that coin collectors want these pieces.

The really disappointing thing about this particular piece is that it is being offered for sale in the National Air and Space Museum at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. I really thought that the Smithsonian would be more careful. The motto on the advertising card that came with this piece says "in God we trust." I guess we can't rely on anyone else!

I am always happy to receive readers' comments about numismatic promotions, whether good or bad. Write to me at P.O. Box 60145, Colorado Springs, CO 80960. If possible, please enclose a sample or photocopy of the promotion in question.

Bright Idea

A friendly, organized debate about issues facing numismatics could add a great deal to your next coin meeting. Keeping in mind that ultimately we are all on the same side and want to promote and share our love of coins, such a debate could address:

- Coinage redesign
- Commemorative coinage program
- Ways to promote coin collecting
- Collectors vs. investors
- Encapsulated coins
- The most beautiful U.S. coin

—Thomas Patchett

Obituaries

ROBERT N. MATYLEWICZ—LM 727

Robert Matylewicz died recently in Scranton, Pennsylvania, at the age of 65. He became an ANA member in 1967.

A life member of the Pennsylvania Association of Numismatists (PAN), Matylewicz served the organization as president in 1989 and 1990 and was presented the Frank Gasparro Numismatist of the Year Award at the 1987 PAN convention. He also held life membership in the Wyoming Valley Coin Club, serving as president in 1970-71 and 1990-92; Great Eastern Numismatic Association; Florida United Numismatists; and Garden State Numismatic Association. A member of the Wilkes-Barre Coin Club, Middle Atlantic Numismatic Association, International Numismatic Society and the Blue Ridge Numismatic Association, he also served several terms as president of the Scranton Coin Club.

He is survived by his wife, Eleanor; two daughters; a brother; a grandson; and nieces and nephews.

MATT J. GAZSO—ANA 6656

Matt J. Gazso died March 18, 1992, in North Olmsted, Ohio. He was 86 years old.

Gazso was instrumental in organizing several coin clubs in the Cleveland area, including the West Cuyahoga Coin Club, which celebrates its 35th anniversary this year. He joined the ANA in 1938 and received a 50-year membership medal at the ANA's 98th Anniversary Convention in Cincinnati. A collector of and authority on coinage of the German States, Empire and Weimar Republic, he also was an expert on Mexican revolution currency. A knowledge of early U.S. coinage rounded out his expertise.

He is survived by his wife of 62 years, Helen.

BYNUM E. SMITH—ANA 101618

Bynum E. Smith of Richmond, Virginia, died April 1, 1992. He was 67 years old.

About Smith, a retired electrical engineer and member of the Virginia Numismatic Association, The Virginia Numismatist notes, "He was a familiar figure at our shows through Marby's, a coin business in which he was a partner, and his genial presence will be missed at our future gatherings." Smith also served the Richmond Coin Club as president in 1981-82.

He is survived by his wife, Jane; two sons, Mark and Victor; and a daughter, Marsha.

The English clergy eventually came under attack. In 1529 a copy of Simon Fish's "Supplication for the Beggars" was delivered to Henry. Fish attacked the clergy without mercy. He began by pointing out that at least one-third of the kingdom was in their hands and, when counted with the 10-percent tax they levied, they controlled over half the kingdom. These "holy thieves," Fish stated, took nothing from the people "but translate all rule, power, lordship, authority, obedience and dignity from Your Grace unto them."

Since it had become evident 10 years earlier that Cardinal Wolsey was virtually ruler of England, this attack could easily be directed toward Wolsey, as well as all other clerics in England. Fish questioned whether the king was stronger than Parliament, since so many of its members were bishops, abbots and priors.

Cardinal Wolsey and the Parliament held conflicting views. He wanted to make the crown independent of Parliament, an effort that proved unsuccessful. The clerics in Parliament had witnessed Wolsey's use of legatine authority against them for his personal benefit.

The clergy also operated ecclesiastical mints as far back as A.D. 700. The oldest surviving at the time were those at Canterbury and York. The ecclesiastical mint in York was located in the episcopal palace and continued to operate when the royal mint in York ceased operations from time to time. The masters of these mints were required to return some of their profits to the crown.

The crown supplied dies to the mints. Under this system, it had become traditional that the only coin the clerics could produce was the silver penny. When the halfpence denomination was introduced, the clerics grudgingly were allowed to produce it, too. The two most powerful of these mints, Canterbury and York, eventually began striking half groats, Canterbury in 1465 and York in 1501. There was some opposition, but production continued.

The practice of marking the coins produced in these mints with a badge of office, such as the cardinal's hat or keys, had been exercised by other clerics before Wolsey's time. Archbishop Bainbridge, who preceded Wolsey as master of the mint at York, had used keys and the cardinal's hat on some of his coins.

Wolsey's indictment was brought on first by his failure to secure a divorce for Henry from Catherine of Aragon. She had been unable to provide him with a male heir, and the matter of succession was of grave concern. In addition, England's foreign and domestic policies were in ruin. The king himself seemed to be the only one in the country who still believed in Wolsey. The lords were against him because he had usurped their lands and power. The common people opposed him because of mounting clerical abuses. The example presented by Fish in his "Supplication for the Beggars" cited earlier as well as the Richard Hunne case prove this.

Hunne was an outspoken merchant who held strong views against the privileges and pretensions of the clergy.

He was imprisoned by the Bishop of London on a charge of heresy and subsequently murdered. The murder was made to appear a suicide. The public believed neither the heresy charge nor the suicide and demanded a Christian burial for Hunne. Rather than admit Hunne's innocence, the Bishop of London presided over an ecclesiastical court, found the corpse guilty and had it burned. The Hunne case brought to light the issue of clerical privilege over the civil rights of laymen.

I believe the charge brought against Wolsey regarding the issuance of the groat was simply a case of wanting to accumulate more accusations against him. The text of the charge states that he was guilty not just of issuing the piece, but also of placing the cardinal's hat on the king's groat.

If the denomination were the issue, there would have been no sense in mentioning the symbolism of the hat, particularly since this symbol had been used before and by other men. Granted, some had opposed the ecclesiastical mints' right to coin larger denominations, but these objections always had been overruled. The order Henry gave Wolsey in 1526 to revamp the coinage provided the Lord Chancellor with an opportunity to change the design of the groat, an occasion he used to honor the king with a new portrait.

According to Seaby's Standard Catalogue of British Coins, the groats issued by Wolsey with the cardinal's hat bearing the mintmarks of York were issued from 1526 to 1530. Again, if the striking of the groat was the real charge, why did three years pass before it was brought up? I was unable to find any evidence in Letters and Papers of the reign of Henry VIII that would suggest any opposition to the coinage at all until the actual charges were made. The accusation had to wait until Wolsey could be made the scapegoat for the crimes of the clergy. His secular unpopularity and failures added to the charges.

Wolsey may have been guilty of usurping the king's prerogative by issuing groats, but he got away with this crime until enough pressure built up against him on other matters. Then he was charged with putting a symbol of Rome (the cardinal's hat) on the king's groat, not with simply issuing the groat. •

Silica Gel — A Dry Idea

WHAT IS THE best way to keep your coins safe and dry? This question seems uppermost in the minds of readers this month.

Q. I would like your opinion about keeping silica gel packets in the same place where coins are stored. Are the packets any good, and, if so, where can I purchase them?

On another note, of which material do you prefer a coin storage box to be made—metal, plastic or cardboard?

—R.P., California

A. Silica gel packets certainly are a good idea. Silica is a desiccant, that is, it removes water from the atmosphere. In an enclosed space, like a safe or safe-deposit box, where there is little air circulation, some silica gel packets should keep the air relatively moisture-free. However, a large amount of air circulation (and thus a constant supply of humidity) will quickly “wear out” the packets.

Remember, you will need proportionately more silica gel for a larger storage space. The gel does not last forever and must be replaced occasionally or rejuvenated by drying it in a microwave or warm oven. A couple of packets should work for quite a few months in a standard safe-deposit box.

Silica gel is inexpensive, although it is not something you can buy readily at your neighborhood grocery store or coin shop. You’ll often find packets in cartons containing computer or camera equipment. It is also available from chemical supply houses and hobby shops.

Coin-storage boxes—the kind used to conveniently house and carry a large number of 2 x 2-inch coin holders or rolls of coins—are reasonably safe, whether composed of cardboard, plastic or metal. Choose whichever best suits your needs and budget. The cardboard ones are cheaper, but do not hold up quite as well as plastic or metal. Metal boxes are quite durable, but might rust, although most won't. Personally, I prefer those made of plastic similar to that used for children's lunch boxes. They cost about as much as metal boxes, but don't have sharp edges and don't easily dent, break or scratch (not to mention they are lighter in weight).

Q. I have some silver dollar rolls in paper wrappers that have been in my safe-deposit box for almost 20 years. I do not know their current condition. Should I put them in plastic tubes instead?

—J.B., Illinois

A. I suggest you use the plastic tubes. Unlike paper wrappers, they will not accelerate the toning (oxidation) process. Many coins, especially the end coins in a roll, tone over time. Some eventually become technicolor masterpieces, but many more do not, especially those that have been allowed to tone too long. Plastic tubes are far safer for such pieces, particularly if you do not inspect your coins periodi-

Plastic tubes are preferable to paper wrappers for long-term storage of rolls of coins.

Q. What is the best way to remove fingerprints from coins?

—R.N., Florida

A. Although this problem has been discussed previously (see my column in the April 1992 issue of The Numismatist), quite a few readers have asked this question in recent months. Unfortunately, there is no way to eradicate fingerprints from most coins without making them even less desirable.

The reason for the difficulty is that the fingerprint you see on a coin today often was caused by careless handling months or very likely years ago. When your finger touches a coin's surface, it leaves behind a small amount of oil. Over time, this oil will cause the coin's surface to oxidize in the pattern of your fingerprint.

By the time a fingerprint becomes visible, the oxidation usually has disrupted the coin's surface, and attempts to remove it could further harm the surface. A very light fingerprint can be removed from some silver coins with a light, quick "dip" in a mild, diluted acid solution (sold by many coin and jewelry dealers). But, even if the fingerprint comes off, the dip might impair the coin's luster so that it would have been more desirable with the fingerprint.

Copper is even worse. It oxidizes more readily than silver, and a light dip will turn most uncirculated copper coins a very undesirable, bright pink color. There is practically no way to remove a fingerprint from a copper coin without harming the piece further.

When in doubt about cleaning, experiment with some low-value coins first. I highly recommend that you seek the advice of a seasoned numismatist before dipping any coins. Almost any procedure used to remove fingerprints will cause far more harm than good. •

Conducting Your Own Specific Gravity Tests

ONE OF THE most useful pieces of information in authentication is a coin's density. Most U.S. coins adhere to exact tolerances of metal content. Significant deviation from established density standards for a coin issue can be evidence of a bogus specimen.

Specific gravity is the ratio of the weight of a given volume of a substance to that of an equal volume of another substance (usually water) used as a standard. The concept dates back to ancient times. Syracusan King Hieron II (275-215 B.C.) suspected that his crown maker, after being given a specific amount of gold to produce a crown, had shortchanged him, even though the weight of the original quantity of gold matched the weight of the completed crown.

The king posed this problem to Archimedes, a well-known mathematician of the day. The story goes that Archimedes conceived the theory of specific gravity while climbing into a bath. He proved it to the king in the following manner: The correct amount of gold was placed in a tub, which in turn was filled with water to near overflowing. The gold was then removed and replaced by the questioned crown. The tub overflowed.

Because the crown maker had taken some of the gold and replaced it with a less dense metal, he found it necessary to increase the volume of the crown to match the weight of the gold provided. Because of the increased volume, the tub overflowed and proved the crown maker's dishonesty.

Fortunately, today we are armed with more sophisticated methods to determine density. However, the test for specific gravity is seldom used, perhaps because of the mistaken perception that the process is complicated and requires sophisticated equipment.

BRAD RODGERS

It is easy to construct your own apparatus for determining specific gravity. Aside from the digital scale, which can be purchased for about $145, most of the materials can be constructed with items found around the home or office.

You can construct a specific gravity (SG) apparatus that, aside from the initial purchase of an accurate scale (approximately $145), costs only pennies. The goal of the process is to obtain two measurements—a dry weight and a wet weight. The dry weight is merely the “normal” weight of the coin. The wet weight is the weight of the coin when immersed in water. Once you have the two weights, determining the specific gravity is only two simple mathematical calculations away.

The heart of this system is an accurate scale. The Tanita™ digital scale (Model 1476) or a similar unit that is accurate to 1/10 gram should suffice.

Besides the scale, you must obtain or make the following:

1) A clear plastic or glass container to hold the water in which the coin is immersed.

2) A wire hanger from which to suspend the coin. This can be made by bending paper clips.

3) A frame that rests on the scale and holds the wire hanger and coin. This assembly can be constructed from a wire clothes hanger.

4) A “bridge” that spans the scale and supports the container of water. This can be made from a cardboard or plastic coin box.

5) Distilled water. Purer water gives better readings.

Once you have gathered the above items, find a sturdy, hard-surfaced platform that is not susceptible to movement or vibration. (For example, a heavy desk is preferable to a folding card table.) Eliminate stray air currents by closing windows and doors.

Position the scale on the platform. Set the balance to zero. Place your coin on the scale. This reading is the dry weight.

Now put together your SG apparatus. Set the frame on the scale. Pass the bridge through the frame and over the scale. Make sure the bridge does not touch the frame or scale. Fill the container with distilled water and place it on the bridge. Make sure that the container does not touch the frame and that the weight of the container has not caused the bridge to touch the other components.

Attach the hanger to the center top of the frame. The hanger should extend well into the container without touching the bottom or sides.

Now zero, or “tare,” the scale register. This allows you to isolate the weight of the coin in water by canceling out the weight of the frame and hanger.

Remove the hanger. (In so doing, you will notice a negative reading on the scale equal to the weight of the hanger.) Place the specimen on the hanger and then suspend the two from the frame. Make sure the coin is completely immersed in the water, with no air bubbles clinging to it. (If bubbles are present, you usually can jar them from the coin by gently tapping the

It is important that the coin and hanger clear the sides of the container and that the frame does not touch the container or the bridge. Place the unit on a sturdy, hard-surfaced table, desk or countertop in a draft-free area.

frame with a pencil.)

Again, make sure the coin and hanger are clear of the sides of the container and that the frame is free of the container and the bridge. Give the coin and hanger a few seconds to stabilize, then record the reading on the scale. This is the wet weight.

Remove the coin and replace the hanger. Your scale register should now return to zero. If it does not, you have made a mistake. You may want to make several tests to validate your findings. If the differences are minimal, take the average.

Now for the math. Subtract the wet weight from the dry weight. Divide the dry weight by the difference.

For example, the specific gravity of a Morgan dollar is determined as follows:

$$\begin{aligned} 26.730\text{g (Dry Weight)} - 24.143\text{g} \\ \text{(Wet Weight)} &= 2.587\text{g} \\ 26.730\text{g (Dry Weight)} \div 2.587\text{g} &= \\ 10.332 \text{ SG} \end{aligned}$$

You have now performed your first specific gravity test. Compare your reading with the SG chart below. For standard-issue U.S. coins, your calculations should match those shown. If they do not, either you have made an error or your coin's metal content differs from the norm.

The procedure outlined here is very basic and consequently has its limitations. For more accurate results, it is necessary to correct for water temperature and volume, and for the suspension device immersed in the water. These factors are explained in depth by Robert Kriz in the July 1975 issue of The Numismatist (p. 1481). •

AUCTION INSIGHTS BY BOB MERRILL

More on Confidence

"Bob, how could that lot sell for so much? Who was that guy? Was that the consignor buying it back?"—unsuccessful floor bidder who was successful in his perception and is glad he did not win the lot at that ridiculous price.

"If I had known that lot was only going to bring $____, I would have jumped in last night."—successful lot viewer who was unsuccessful at the auction because he got lost on the way to the sale.

"I never would have consigned that lot if I thought it was going to bring $____. Why, that was only three increments over my protective bid."—successful consignor who thinks he was unsuccessful.

What does all this gibberish mean? You guessed it—all three are talking about the same lot. I witness similar scenarios at every auction, and my friends at competing firms hear it, too.

How can this be, particularly if one is talking about encapsulated coins? In a nutshell, each dealer sees coins differently. If this were not true, they could never trade among themselves as they do. Now, add in a room full of collectors, investors and financial planners, and the competition becomes even keener.

This brings me back to last month's column about confidence. A winning bid that appears to be expensive or inordinately high to one may be reasonable to another. A knowledgeable bidder knows what he's doing. He recognizes Valentine, Bolender or Overton varieties in his specialty. He knows the series and literally has a feel for it.

I recall one large cent specialist from North Dakota who could identify 1794 cents by Sheldon numbers without the benefit of Penny Whimsy. (There are only 80+ varieties!) He didn't know a "No Stars" half dime from a "Legend" type, but that was irrelevant. He knew his '94s backwards and sideways.

Noted early coinage expert Jules Reiver of Delaware collects Newcomb large cent varieties by die state! You don't think he has knowledge? Jules has probably forgotten more about coins than most of us have ever learned. He and the thousands of insightful collectors and dealers around the country are the ones that keep a coin from being "stolen" at auction.

Anyone can write a check; just ask your Congressperson. But it takes more than a fat checkbook. Again, it all comes back to knowledge. If you are willing to pay the price of becoming truly learned—and I'm not talking about Guide Book mintage figures—you can begin to really enjoy auctions.

Mid-American, Stack's, Bowers and Merena, Superior, and our firm, Heritage, all have regularly scheduled sales. Unlike cable TV's home shopping clubs, you have no idea what you are missing if you are not a participant.

Pick a sale and attend. An exciting experience awaits you, particularly when you are confident about what you can accomplish. •

Bob Merrill has served as auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Previously, he taught history at a Dallas junior college. Heritage, selected as the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary conventions through 1995, has been awarded more ANA auctions since 1980 than all other firms combined.

CURATOR'S CORNER

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

A Remarkable Aluminum Garfield Medal

One of the most important recent acquisitions in the ANA Museum collection is an apparently unique inaugural medal of President James A. Garfield. Struck in aluminum, this rare piece displays the original inaugural medal reverse (revised in 1886 to serve as a commemorative mortuary piece). The circumstances surrounding the striking of the aluminum example are unknown.

A popular political figure, Garfield had had a successful and respectable career in the United States Congress at the time of his nomination as the Republican Party's compromise candidate for the Presidency at the 1880 convention in Chicago. Born in 1831 in the proverbial log cabin and having overcome poverty, Garfield graduated with distinction from Williams College and began a career as a teacher, principal and lay minister. He was a "Free Soil" advocate and early supporter of the new Republican party, and entered the Ohio Legislature in 1859. Gaining renown as a military commander during the Civil War, he was elected to Congress in 1863.

On March 4, 1881, Garfield was inaugurated as the 20th President of the United States, having been elected in November with a plurality of only 10,000 popular votes. During the four months he actually was in office, Garfield was not able to leave an effective mark on history, and his record is basically known as that of a promise unfulfilled. He was shot in Washington on July 2, 1881, by Charles J. Guiteau, an insane, disgruntled aspirant for political appointment. Garfield died on September 19, 1881, following an excruciating decline attended by thoroughly incompetent medical treatment.

Garfield's handsome medallic portrait was sculpted by U.S. Mint Chief Engraver Charles Edward Barber as the President lay dying in the summer of 1881. The Museum's aluminum medal is described under No. PR-20 in R.W. Julian's Medals of the United States Mint, The First Century, 1792-1892 (ANA Library Cat. No. RM15.J8). At least one piece was struck in silver, and perhaps 89 in bronze (not counting modern restrikes).

Carson City Coins

because the larger denomination coins have a larger surface area, they are more vulnerable to surface abrasions, scuffs and scratches, which can transform them from uncirculated to circulated.

Another significant factor relates to the actual metal content of the coins. The gold/copper alloy in the gold coins is somewhat softer than the silver/copper alloy used in the manufacture of the silver coins. Thus the gold coins are intrinsically more susceptible to scratches and abrasions, which are significant in determining grade.

Combining the above factors makes it easy to understand why so few high-quality mint-state examples of large-denomination Carson City coins have survived. Large denomination Carson City coins encapsulated as MS-63 are great rarities. By contrast, it is relatively easy to obtain an encapsulated MS-63, or even MS-64, dime from the Carson City Mint.

Conclusions

TWO OF THE assumptions used in the present investigation are critical to the statistical validity of the conclusions drawn: 1) the PCGS and NGC re-grading of mint-state Carson City coins relative to first-time grading is sufficiently small to be ignored; and 2) the coins graded to date represent a random sample of the population of uncirculated Carson City coins. The author feels that these assumptions are likely to be valid at this point in the history of third-party grading.

Independent of these assumptions and with the supportive auction date, it appears that a large percentage of non-Morgan Carson City coins are particularly rare in mint state today, agreeing with the analyses pursued by White. Furthermore, compelling statistical evidence indicates that the higher mint-state grades become increasingly rare as the denomination increases.

In the author's view, these are the highlights of the present study:

- Based on the author's experience, coupled with auction data and the population reports, any coin for which 25 or fewer encapsulated examples are shown in Table 3 ranks at least Rarity 5 (R-5) on Breen's rarity scale—in other words, for at least 80 percent of the non-Morgan Carson City varieties, 75 or fewer mint-state examples exist.

- The larger the denomination, the lower the average grade.

- Dimes and quarters are the most common mint-state Carson City denominations (primarily because of the 1876 and 1877 dimes and the 1877 quarter).

- Most of the mint-state Carson City gold coins are found with numerous contact marks. The high statistical confidence indicating relatively low grades for the Carson City gold coin population encourages speculation as to cause. The relative softness of the gold—versus silver—alloys and the relatively large surface areas of the gold coins are likely to have had substantial impacts. The more abundant and lower-valued coins possibly were more likely to have been stored or lost for long periods of time without any major concern on the part of their owners, thus increasing the chances for generating large populations of high-quality coins. These factors no doubt contribute to the author's observation that at least 90 percent of the gold coin varieties are R-5 or rarer in mint state.

Slabbing coins is becoming an increasingly fashionable activity. The well-known advantages of protecting numismatic rarities from the environment and of improving coin marketability have obviously contributed to the popularity of third-party grading services. The population reports compiled by these services tell a story, and, when coupled with statistical techniques and historical facts, enhance our understanding and reinforce our confidence in numismatic interpretations and observations. •

Founded by Sidney Smith, LM #332 (1918-1983)

The year was 1905 and President Theodore Roosevelt asked the noted sculptor and his personal friend, Augustus Saint-Gaudens, to redesign our nation's coinage based on the model of the sculptured high relief designs of the ancient Greeks. Inspired by the ancient muses, Saint-Gaudens created what many consider the most beautiful and artistic coin in the history of U.S. coinage -- the 1907, Roman Numerals, high relief $20.00 gold coin. The coinage of the ancient Greeks, that inspired Saint-Gaudens,

as well as the subsequent coinage of the Roman and Byzantine

empires comprise one of the most popular collecting pastimes known throughout the world.

Both affordable and educational, collecting classical coinage is an easy avocation to pursue and Classical Numismatic Group is in its 16th year of serving the collector in this fascinating field. If you, like Roosevelt and Saint-Gaudens, are inspired by ancient coinage, then let us introduce you to its pleasures with our fully illustrated and detailed catalogues.

The Best Lesson of All

IT'S SEPTEMBER, so this is the annual "Back to School" column. There are lessons to be learned here.

PROBABILITY 101: Who says lightning never strikes the same place twice? According to Reuters news agency, on June 13 a fire caused by lightning wrecked the same house near Toulouse, France, for the third time in 20 years.

PROBABILITY 102: The Oregon State Commission on Judicial Fitness and Disability accused Judge Ralph Currin of deciding traffic cases by flipping a coin. Judge Currin since has retired.

.....

SPELL IT OUT: Broward County (Florida) sheriff's deputies successfully lured two dozen fugitives into custody. The suspects received letters indicating they may have inheritance money coming. When the fugitives showed up at a hotel to collect, they were arrested. The deputies sent the letters under the name of a fictitious company, "Joint American Inheritance Locators" (its acronym is JAIL).

GEOGRAPHY AND HISTORY: Do any readers of this column know if city officials in Utica, Michigan, finally located their 1967 time capsule? It contains cultural artifacts and was buried 25 years ago as part of Utica's 150th anniversary celebration.

It was supposed to be opened this year for the 175th anniversary festivities, but during a recent city council discussion about it, the town clerk, Cathy McGrail, blurted out, "Wait a minute! Where is our old time capsule?" No one knew.

ENVIRONMENTAL-FINANCIAL PROTECTION: Shortly after his garbage was picked up, Muncie, Indiana, computer operator Kenneth Arbuckle realized he accidentally threw away a winning lottery ticket. He tracked down the garbage truck, which already had unloaded its haul into a pile of debris 4 feet high, 20 feet square. Arbuckle climbed through the trash, searching for 90 minutes until he located the missing ticket. It was worth $955.

A CLASS BY HERSELF: Congratulations to Tammy Lynn Williams, who is starting her freshman year at Washington State University after graduating at the top of her class at Bickleton (Washington) High School. She had an A-minus grade average, but scholarship was not the only reason Williams was valedictorian. The total enrollment at Bickleton High this past spring was 16, and Williams was the only senior.

GRAPHIC ARTS 101: Florida ANA member Robert C. McCurdy says he likes "to coax a smile from both dealers and collectors," so he's been creating "souvenir cards" since 1985 for the Lower Caloosahatchee Paper Money Collectors Club. At first glance, the cards resemble the familiar reproductions of historic currency with brief narratives printed below. But after first glance, you know you're being had.

McCurdy's illustrated creations include a $10 note from "The Bullshippers' Bank" (1986); a $1 bill from "The Pisherman's Bank" (1988); and $1 scrip from the "Leekey Boat Co." (1992). Each souvenir card appropriately is dated "April 1" of the year in which it was issued. (For more information about the cute cards, write to McCurdy at P.O. Box 150495, Cape Coral, FL 33915-0495.)

It's September and school is back in session. Perhaps Robert McCurdy has learned the best lesson of all: have fun with numismatics!

Despite his appeals to reason, Earl's wife takes exception to his collection of "bawdy house" tokens from the Old West.

The ANA was founded in 1891, and claims more than 27,000 members from every state in the Union and many foreign countries. The Association's official journal, The Numismatist, was first published in 1888 by Dr. George F. Heath. Dear Collector,

These are only three of the cities we visited this fall to buy coin collections like yours. We can PAY YOU THE MOST for your collection because of our retail location in Bozeman, MT. No matter what type of coins you have collected, WE BUY IT ALL. Gold collections, Morgan and Peace dollar collections, Type coins or any of the 20th century series, we will buy everything you have collected.

This year we bought several six figure coin collections— no collection or estate is too large for us to purchase. We can bank wire the funds directly into your checking account, which gives you immediate access to those funds. We take the risk out of selling your coins.

Since 1974 we have been engaged ONLY in the business of buying and selling coins. As a member of PNG and a life member of ANA, you can be assured of working with a professional who has devoted his career to rare coins. Pick up the phone and give me a call at

Numismatic Curricula Targets Students

A LONG-STANDING CONCERN of mine and many other collectors is how to attract new people to this wonderful hobby of numismatics, for tomorrow's hobby is dependent on today's youth. A number of terrific ideas have been proposed over the years, and many of them have been successfully implemented by the ANA, clubs and private organizations. Each one is important and serves numismatics well.

Now I would like to present another such plan to encourage today's students to become the future of the hobby. It is an idea I have had for many years and is currently being pursued by the ANA staff. Called the "Numismatic Curricula Program," it will help teachers of American history in elementary, junior and senior high schools incorporate numismatic studies with their lessons. We will field-test the program during the next academic year (1998-99) and distribute it nationally as we begin the next century. The curricula will be tied directly to the educational standards established by each state, and both the United States Department of Education and the Council for the Teaching of Social Studies have agreed to lend their support and promote the program.

Working with a team of history teachers at all three academic levels, the ANA Education Department will develop teacher and study guides; student readings; and multi-media materials, including computer software. Topics that may be covered in the program include the Colonial and Revolutionary War eras; the United States

.....
BY ANTHONY SWIATEK

Constitution; Jacksonian Democracy; the Civil War; American Expansionism, including the discovery of gold; the Progressive and Depression eras; World Wars I and II; and the role of money in American society—from barter to electronic smart cards. By exposing hundreds of thousands of school-age students to numismatics each year, the ANA hopes to make a sustained impression on students in their first 12 years of formal education, and stimulate them to go that one little step further and discover the joys of collecting.

In developing the Numismatic Curricula, the ANA will consult with a committee of renowned numismatic researchers and authors. An experienced American history curriculum writer and a numismatic intern will be contracted to assist in preparing the program. In addition, a related but separate program is being considered that would further the transition from student to collector.

Everyone I have spoken with about the Numismatic Curricula Program has been very supportive. At last summer's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City, the ANA Board of Governors unanimously approved the educational plan and the campaign to raise the necessary funding—$190,000. We already have nearly 25 percent of the needed funds to implement this program, with professional numismatist Harvey Stack of Stack's in New York generously contributing $10,000. Miles Kessler, ANA development director, is seeking additional funding for the program.

This is a major undertaking by your ANA, and it will take time and a lot of hard work to make it succeed. However, I hope you agree that the ANA Numismatic Curricula Program is much more than one collector's dream. It is an idea that can and will bear fruit for the individual betterment of students and the long-term health of the numismatic hobby.

ANA President Anthony Swiatek (LM 1099) is a Master Numismatist and a Numismatic Mentor. An authority on gold and silver commemorative coins, he has testified before Congress and is the author of a number of books, newsletters and articles. Swiatek has won the ANA's Heath and Wayte and Olga Raymond Literary Awards, and has received the ANA Medal of Merit and Outstanding Adult Advisor awards.

Rarity: The Next Frontier?

FIRST IT WAS low mintages in current series, like 1950-D nickels and 1931-S cents. Then it was "Gem BU" and "Gem Proof" type coins. After that came slabs and certified grading, population reports and Wall Street. Now it seems even these concepts have been played out. As we approach the 21st century, what will cause the next bull market and what areas will be its prime focus?

The most promising coins may be those whose value is stable. There may come a time that numismatists campaign against the tremendous price spreads between adjacent mint-state or proof grades. I think any United States coin with an original mintage under 10,000, almost irrespective of grade, is an excellent collector coin (depending, of course, on one's budget). By definition, this excludes 20th-century issues. Many earlier silver and gold issues, however, boast mintages in the three- and four-figure range, among them a handful of "proof only" 19th-century issues:

- 1836, 1840-48 and 1852 half cents
- 1836-39 Gobrecht dollars
- 1856 Flying Eagle cent (contrary to popular belief)
- 1858 Seated Liberty dollar

With coins like these, grade is of secondary importance; they have substantial value even as low-grade or impaired proofs. What's more, because they were not meant for circulation, such coins are likely to be encountered in very respectable condition.

It seems to be a popular belief that during the hard times of the Great Depression, everyone spent the uncirculated coins they had stored away. It is true that large quantities of uncirculated coins from the early 1900s and possibly the late 1800s were released into circulation during the 1930s. However, so many millions were minted that even if 99.5-percent of the coins did not survive these mass disbursements, several hundred thousand of most dates still would be available. They may not be in the forefront of today's market, but perhaps collecting dust in some Victorian attic or bank vault. (Look at what happened with the 1901-04 O-mint Morgan dollars. Surely you'll never have to worry about a bag or even a roll of proof-only coins turning up.)

The time soon may come when collectors don't take much stock in population reports to determine rarity. For example:

- population reports make no distinction between recently graded coins and those submitted years ago, when grading standards were tighter.
- many coins have been submitted multiple times in hopes of a higher grade, skewing the figures.
- many coins, especially those minted within the last 100 years, have not been encapsulated because they're too common and their value doesn't warrant the grading fee.
- one never knows how many times a coin of a particular date was rejected by a grading service because it was cleaned or otherwise mishandled.
- no one really knows when or where a hoard of a common-date coin will turn up.
- population reports create the illusion that certain rare coins, especially proof-only issues, are relatively common.
- higher populations are a boon for certain issues because they signify a greater degree of availability.

With the exception of certain ultra-rare issues, in the past 20 years little attention has been given to rare circulated (and low-grade uncirculated and proof) material. Will the numismatic community accept the doctrine that beauty is only skin deep, and that coins don't have to be—and can't be—perfect? There appears to be a trend toward this way of thinking. Numismatists are realizing that population reports, while useful for gauging relative scarcity within a series, are merely statistical compilations stored in a computer database since 1986. Will rarity be the next frontier? I believe it has a fair chance, as I can't think of any promotion of common coins that hasn't been stretched to its marketable limits. •

Post Card Recalls Howland Wood's Hobby Involvement

Howland Wood was one of the most learned numismatists of the 20th century. Short in stature, Wood was tall in the extent of his knowledge. His interests were wide, and among his writings were catalogs on United States commemorative coins and those of the Mexican Revolution. Prior to his death in 1938, he had almost completed Coins of the World (20th century) for Wayne Raymond. When the catalog was published shortly afterward, it was dedicated to him. Not surprisingly, it became a standard work for collectors of world coins until superseded by the Whitman and Krause-Mishler catalogs.

The year 1938 happened to be the same year I began to collect seriously, and the book that Wood compiled on world coins was one of the first I purchased.

Having grown up near Boston [and its active numismatic community], Howland Wood had the advantage of many personal relationships in the hobby. That old friends from his Boston Numismatic Society days continued to correspond is attested by the post card pictured below (dated February 6, 1915) from H.A. Gray of Roxbury, Massachusetts, who at that time was New England district secretary for the American Numismatic Association. By then, Wood had become curator of the American Numismatic Society (ANS) in New York. Gray's communication was to advise him of a new discovery as follows:

"Friend Wood. The Oriental coins came to hand O.K. I had no intention of having you attribute them but I am a passive numismatist (i.e., I am already mortgaged to the hilt). However, when I was surfing the net recently, I crashed into numismatics. I congratulate the ANA on its web site. It is a virtual museum floating in cyberspace. I browsed and read the ANA pages and various links for more than an hour. I think I have rediscovered coin collecting.

Thanks for the experience!

thank you for doing so. Yesterday I visited the Library at Harvard College and came across the 'Sutler' shown below. It was pasted in a book so could not see the back, but—thought you might be interested." (Below the message was a drawing of a Sutler's "ticket" good for 5 cents.)

Interestingly, although Harry Gray thanked Howland Wood for attributing some Oriental coins, Gray's primary interests were in the areas of tokens, medals, embossed business cards and paper scrip, on which subjects he wrote a number of articles.

A post card sent to Howland Wood in 1915 calls to mind the ANS curator's strong ties with members of the numismatic community.

be an opportunity to eliminate the religious motto.

Surveys show that over 98 percent of all Americans approve of using the religious wording on their coins. I want to make it very clear that I have never advocated removing that motto, and I am very much in favor of using it on all United States coins. It fits perfectly well with any Peace theme, and is entirely appropriate for our nation's coinage.

Baffled by Buffaloes

You Buffalo nickel fanatics out there might enjoy this:

"What is the highest number of identical words that can consecutively occur in a grammatically correct English sentence?" It turns out there is no limit. However, I think the sentence I have contrived is cool anyway:

This statement is hard to understand until it is explained. First, Buffalo is a city, like Philadelphia or Boston. Any buffalo found in Buffalo might be called a "Buffalo buffalo." As a verb, "buffalo" means to baffle or confuse. For example, if a buffalo manages to stand on one leg, it might confuse or "buffalo" other buffaloes (even those from Buffalo). And it is certainly true that when a buffalo does something, like walk, it does indeed do it.

If you selectively replace some of the words in the statement with "Boston" and "confuse," you get something that makes a bit more sense: "When Boston buffalo confuse Boston buffalo, Boston buffalo [indeed] confuse Boston buffalo."

I hope I haven't buffaloeed anyone!

Kids—The Collectors of Tomorrow

You might think young numismatists are mere specks in the world of collecting; you might also think junior collectors are the most wonderful things on the planet. Yet, when a kid screams, "I GOT A SPECIAL COIN!" or something like that, you probably think it's just an old Bicentennial quarter in pretty bad condition. Well, you'd better think again! That kid has just had a happy collecting experience—one that should be encouraged.

Some adults donate coins to kids, praise them and try to get them to coin shows, which indeed are quite nice. If a kid gets hooked on numismatics, it's great. With your guidance, a kid could learn a lot. (I am now interested in pennies and use Whitman folders to store them.)

So, let's see what would happen if there were no kids in the hobby, only adults:

ADULT—ADULT—ADULT.

BASE DEAD.

ADULT QUITTS.

Then . . .

KID BORN.

STARTS COLLECTING.

MORE GENERATIONS

AS COLLECTORS.

THE HOBBY LIVES!

So you see, kids are not specks, they are the future of the hobby.

This is how most of them start:

"Hmmm . . . Mom, where did you get those coins?" "From friends, why?" "They look cool, could I have some?" "Sure! But be careful . . . they might be worth something someday!" "How could coins be worth something?" "Well, there are misaligned dies, production errors, obsolete coins, rare coins, old coins . . ." "Cool! But Mom, is this something educational, fun, and relaxing all at once?" "Yes! If you want to learn more, I'll pay for you to join the American Numismatic Association." "What's numismatics?" "The hobby of collecting coins." "Neat! I'll join!"

Here's what I recommend for other young collectors: 1) go to a coin show; 2) join a local coin club;

3) buy some numismatic books; and 4) join the ANA!

I hope adults will take time out to introduce more juniors to numismatics. If you do, the story might be: KID JOINS. HAS LOADS OF FUN WITH COINS.

Apologies for Late Delivery

The ANA regrets the delayed delivery of the September 1997 issue of The Numismatist. The magazine entered the mail system on August 21, the third week of the United Parcel Service (UPS) strike. During this time, the United States Postal Service reportedly experienced a flood of mail that severely hampered its processing capability.

UNITED KINGDOM: £2 Trial Pack Illustrates Stages of Minting Process

The British Royal Mint recently released a "Trial Pack" that explains the process used to produce the United Kingdom's first bicolored coin (also the country's first circulating £2 coin), which is scheduled for release this month. The coin has two concentric rings of different alloys of the same metals.

Packaged in a presentation folder are four pieces from different stages of the production of prototypes used by the automatic vending industry to recalibrate equipment before the new coinage is issued. The colorful presentation folder illustrates and describes each phase of the minting process. The ship design on the trial pieces was never intended for the actual coin.

Availability of the 1997 United Kingdom £2 Trial Pack is limited to 6,000. The pack can be purchased for $29.95, plus $4.95 postage and handling per order, from the British Royal Mint, Cheyenne, WY 82008-0031, telephone toll-free 800/221-1215. The 1997 £2 coin is available to collectors in a brilliant-uncirculated (BU) presentation pack, as a gold or silver proof, and as part of Britain's 1997 proof set and BU collection.

BELGIUM: Two Kings Portrayed on Dual-Denominated Coin

For the first time in the history of the Kingdom of Belgium, coins bear dual portraits: that of the current king, Albert II, and his brother and predecessor, King Baudouin. Together they ruled Belgium for the 40-year history of the Treaty of Rome, which created the framework for today's European Union.

The two coins are denominated

Belgium, the first country to grant legal-tender status to the ECU (European Currency Unit), has issued a sterling silver 5-ecu coin bearing accolated portraits of King Albert II and his brother and predecessor, King Baudouin. The reverse motif draws attention to the nations belonging to the European Union.

not in Belgian francs, but in European Currency Units (ECUs) and in Europe's future monetary denomination "euros." A map on the coin's reverse shows European Union's member nations, superimposed on a stylized globe forming the Greek letter epsilon, the symbol adopted for the euro.

The Royal Belgian Mint has struck sterling silver 5-ecu pieces (37mm) and .999 fine gold 50-ecu coins (29mm), available for $38.75 and $315 each, respectively. To order, contact the Royal Belgian Mint's North American representative, The Coin & Currency Institute, P.O. Box 1057, Clifton, NJ 07014, telephone toll-free 800/421-1866, fax 973/471-1062 or E-mail coincurin@aol.com. Please add $4.50 per order for shipping and handling; New Jersey residents should include 6-percent sales tax.

Trial pieces made by the British Royal Mint to facilitate the United Kingdom's transition to a new bicolored £2 coin are combined in a package that describes and shows various steps in the minting process.

PEACE THROUGH COINAGE

A numismatic initiative for the Year 2000

Meeting in New York City during the ANA convention, the U.S. Mint Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee (CCCAC) heard proposals for commemorative coins to be issued in the year 2000. Then ANA president-elect Anthony Swiatek appeared before the committee to support a proposal for a U.S. Peace dollar (which I originated during my term as ANA president), as well as for issuance of similar coins by mints throughout the world. The ANA team emphasized that U.S. leadership is essential to the program's success.

The CCCAC has endorsed the proposal in principle, recommending that no surcharge (or a very small one) be attached to the Peace coin. This would assure the lowest possible price and increase the issue's acceptance by the numismatic community. Money raised from the surcharge on the one-year issue would go to an organization dedicated to humanitarian efforts.

1996-dated proof coins marking important milestones in the nation's history. The first issue celebrates Moldova's fifth anniversary of independence; the second commemorates the 1996 Olympic Games, where Moldovan athletes first competed in an Olympic tournament.

a stylized eagle bearing a shield picturing elements of Moldovan life. The reverse of the 100-lei Independence coin shows a stork and bunch of grapes—set before a rising sun (symbolizing light, optimism and well-being)—surrounded by an ornamental frame representing traditional Moldovan arts of carpet-weaving and carpentry. The reverse of the 100-lei Olympic proof depicts a scene from the double-canoe event at the 1996 Atlanta Games.

Struck in sterling silver, both coins measure 38.61mm in diameter and weigh 28.28g. The Moldovan commemorative 100-lei coins are priced at $54.95 each, plus $4.95 postage and handling per order. NETHERLANDS: New Anti-Counterfeiting Technology Makes Debut

The Dutch Mint recently introduced a new anti-counterfeiting device, called a "Kinegram"™. The .999 fine gold disk can be bonded onto a metal surface and uses microprinting, optical movement and visual illusion.

The Kinegram has several features that change when viewed from different angles: 12 stars (emblematic of the original members of the European Union) and the Greek letter epsilon (symbol for the future European currency, the euro). Although not yet used on coins, the Kinegram appears on a series of Dutch Mint trial pieces called "Euro-medallions."

To obtain more information about the Euro-medallion, contact the Dutch Mint's North American representative, The Coin & Currency Institute, P.O. Box 1057, Clifton, NJ 07014, telephone toll free 800/421-1866, fax 973-471-1062 or E-mail coincurin@aol.com.

The Netherlands Mint has issued "Euro-medallions" that illustrate its use of holographic technology in creating anti-counterfeiting devices.

When It Comes to Cents, Collectors Don't Count

How many links appear on a United States Chain cent of 1793? "Fifteen if you count them, 13 if you don't," explains hobby newcomer Ed Pollack, an ANA member since May.

In an attempt to expand his limited knowledge of numismatics, Pollack was perusing a well-known hobby reference when he came across this description of America's first large cent: "The reverse, rather than portraying a wreath, showed an endless chain made up of thirteen links symbolizing the thirteen colonies."

"I don't know why, but I decided to count the links," says Pollack. "I was surprised to find not 13, but 15. To see if this was just a one-time oversight or an ongoing misconception, I quizzed four dealers in United States coins, and they all believed the chain had 13 links!"

Actual Size: 28.50mm

Issued in 1793, America's first large cent was designed by Henry Voigt. He apparently borrowed from Benjamin Franklin's design for the 1776 Continental Currency dollar when he created the 15-link chain for the reverse.

Marie Antoinette (a.k.a. Heidi Frank of the Austrian Mint) attended the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City this summer to promote Austria's newest series of coins commemorating "Royal Tragedies."

AUSTRIAN MINT

Some numismatists likely have confused the reverse of the Chain cent with that of the Continental Currency dollar of 1776. Benjamin Franklin's design for the latter indeed features a chain comprised of 13 links.

Notes Pollack, "I imagine the designer of the 1793 Chain cent intended the links to represent the states in the Union, which numbered 15 at the time."

"Royal Tragedies" Series Has Universal Appeal

The Austrian Mint's newest series of gold and silver coins commemorates the Habsburgs' "Royal Tragedies." The series was launched in July with a gold 1,000 schilling depicting Austrian-born Marie Antoinette, France's tragic queen. A silver 100 schilling honoring Emperor Maximilian of Mexico (a brother of Austria's Emperor Francis Joseph), who was executed by firing squad in June 1867, is scheduled for release this month.

Notes Kerry Tattersall, marketing director for the Austrian Mint, "This new series is not by any means one of morbid curiosity. . . . [The coins recall] stories of personal heroism and tragedy that left their mark on the history of a great European empire, and indeed the history of the world at large."

The series has been well received, with 80 percent of the 50,000 Marie Antoinette pieces struck selling in the first two months of issue. For further information, visit the Austrian Mint's web site at www.austrian-mint.com, or contact the Mint's North American distributor, Universal Coins, at 800/668-2646.

New Coin Magazine Caters to Investors

Coin Connoisseur, a new magazine published by Barry Stuppler for serious collectors and investors in gold and silver rare coins and bullion, made its debut on July 30 at the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City. In the premier issue, leading coin and precious-metal professionals shared tips on how to profit in the numismatic market. Upcoming issues will focus on consumer protection and "how coin investing and collecting provides privacy and confidentiality."

For the introductory rate of $18, new subscribers will receive a full year (four issues) of Coin Connoisseur, plus one free coin-grading submission from PCGS and NGC. To subscribe, call 888/264-6624.

Long-Lost Film Captures Medalist at Work

The Medal Maker, a rare 35mm documentary filmed in 1929, recently was uncovered by numismatic historian and film producer Mike Craven of Hollywood, California. The vintage 16-minute film, which has been expanded and converted to a 30-minute videotape presentation, follows medalist and commemorative coin designer Laura Gardin Fraser as she creates the National Sculpture Society's Special Medal of Honor.

The Medal Maker, recently reformatted for video, is a 1929 film that follows sculptor Laura Gardin Fraser as she creates an award medal for the prestigious National Sculpture Society.

Says Craven, "The [original] shots of Laura Fraser, the foundry and the actual striking were of exceptionally high quality. On the other hand, the art cards for this silent film were horrible! They were skewed and

Treasure of Xerxes Huge Hoard of Silver Buried circa 450 BC

And now, as he looked and saw the whole Hellespont covered with the vessels of his fleet and all the shore and every plain about Abydos as full as possible of his men, Xerxes congratulated himself upon his good fortune; but after a little while he wept. His uncle Artabanus, who was with him at the time, asked about this strange expression of contradictory feelings. 'I was thinking,' Xerxes replied, 'and it came into my mind how pitifully short human life is . . .'

Herodotus VII, 45-46

His moment in history described by the ancient historian Herodotus was perhaps one of the greatest military undertakings in history given the current technology. The accounts relate that the great Persian king Xerxes amassed an army of 1,700,000 men for his invasion of Greece in 480 BC. An entire city was needed to feed the army just two meals, and an entire river ran dry when they drank. And, huge quantities of silver coins were struck to finance the massive military payroll and all the expenses of huge military operations. The Hellespont was the waterway, at least a mile wide, connecting the Black Sea and the Mediterranean Sea and separating Europe from Asia Minor. In order to move his vast army, Xerxes commanded his engineers, mostly Phoenecians and Egyptians, to build a bridge. To do this, 674 ships were tied together in a double row and planks were laid over the decks. The planks were covered with brushwood and dirt to create a road. Xerxes invaded Greece and very nearly succeeded in conquering the civilized world.

As the Persians moved through northern Greece, they were met at the pass of Thermopylae, where 300 Spartans led by Leonidas fought to the last man, and successfully delayed the Persian advance long enough for the Greek cities to prepare. Although Xerxes captured Athens, the Athenians had fled with their fleet to the nearby island of Salamis where the Persian fleet was defeated by the more experienced Athenian navy. The army of the allied Greek city-states, led by Spartans was able to defeat the Persian army at Plataea in 479 BC and effectively ended Xerxes attempted conquest of Greece.

Xerxes is long dead, but his observations on the brevity of human existence still apply today, even though we average more than twice the usual life span of the ancients. By collecting, studying and handling the coins of the ancients, our human experience can be greatly enhanced. In our hands we have relics of great kings who commanded huge armies to conquer kingdoms now vanished. These treasures of precious metals that are now unearthed from the former paths of these ancient armies are sometimes the only tangible links that we have to those battles. Now you can expand your horizons to the Fifth Century BC with a modest contribution to the Jonathan K. Kern Co.

This hoard of silver was composed of over 100 pounds of struck sigloi. A single siglos averages 5.55 grams of nearly pure silver and depicts the Great King of Persia as an archer in an action pose. Some interpret his posture as the archaic art expression of running, and others describe him as kneeling. These coins were struck with a heavy sledge hammer on very thick oblong planchets, much like silver bullets, with a handheld upper die depicting the archer. The lower die was probably embedded in wood or stone to secure it. The lower, or reverse die of these coins, was used in the manner of the very first coins ever produced in the world. This lower die was a roughly rectangular raised metal lump, appearing in hundreds of mysterious variations. The raised reverse die creates an incuse impression for the backs of the sigloi. Museum studies now in progress utilize the reverse incused impressions for quick die referencing, since the obverse impression of the Great King is frequently off center. These coins represented a huge explosion in the production of coined money, and were struck rapidly to fill the need for pre-weighted silver authorized by a powerful ruler.

The Great King is shown holding a spear and a bow on the sigloi attributed to the Asia Minor mint of Sardeis, in Lydia and a bow and dagger on the other type which are possibly all from a different mint further south. Frequently they are countermarked with tiny punches by merchants or bankers, possibly to attest to the quality of the silver. We can sell either type in a nice fine grade for $37 each, a nice very fine for $77 each or a nice extremely fine for $277 each. The raised obverse always grades much less than the incused reverse so our nice fine will usually have an extremely fine reverse.

Coin Patina: Blessing or Not?

The toning that forms naturally on the surfaces of a variety of coins, including silver and copper pieces, is shown to be chemically protective.

by Terry G. Lenz
ANA 161408

When exposed to our chemically active environment, most coins form natural patinas that protect the underlying metal.

ONE OF THE more important factors numismatists consider when evaluating a coin is its surface quality. This includes not only traditional descriptives, such as luster and strike, but also toning, surface roughness, porosity and originality. In turn, surface quality is dependent on the coin's metal content and unique past, which encompasses metal preparation, the minting process, circulation, storage and, in many cases, unfortunate attempts to clean or "improve" the coin's appearance.

As a chemical engineer with an interest in numismatics, I have followed the recent discussions of coin toning in hobby literature. Virtually all this coverage has dealt with the effect of sulfide toning on uncirculated silver coins. However, the subject of toning is much broader than this and deserving of further treatment.

Coin Surface Chemistry

LIKE IT OR not, we and our coins reside in a chemically active world. Through everyday experience, we know that certain metals are more susceptible than others to chemical reaction in our environment. The vulnerability of iron and the virtually inert behavior of pure gold are well known. The varying tendency for chemical reaction is not random, but rather has a basis in the atomic structure of elements, which allows chemists to quantitatively rank metals according to their chemical reactivity.

Table 1 lists some of the more common metals in order of their degree of chemical reactivity. The tendency toward such reactivity increases from the quite inert noble metal gold at the bottom of the table, through the moderately reactive copper, iron and zinc, to the extremely reactive alkali metals sodium and potassium. Interestingly, the most popular choices for coinage metals are those that are among the least chemically reactive. However, it is worth noting that two of the more reactive metals—aluminum and zinc—have been used for coinage with some frequency, while iron rarely has been employed (I will explain why later).

The tendency for chemical reaction (or inversely, the degree of chemical inertness) is only one factor in the choice of metal for coinage. Other important considerations are:

- Availability.
 - Economics of recovery.
 - Physical properties, such as melting point, hardness, tensile strength and toughness.
- The importance of these properties has led to the practice of combining metals to create bronze; brass; and copper-nickel, silver-copper and gold-copper alloys.

- Toxicity.
- Ease of striking and the quality of the final product.

When the metals shown in Table 1 react with components of our environment—notably oxygen, water, carbon dioxide, hydrogen sulfide, sulfur dioxide and various salts—they oxidize (or become positively charged), commonly producing oxides, sulfides, hydroxides, sulfates, halides and carbonates. The key question is, are these products of surface oxidation beneficial or harmful to coins?

Are Patinas Chemically Protective?

FIGURE 1 ILLUSTRATES how oxidation can form a protective shield, preventing fresh metal from further reacting with contaminants. New reactants must penetrate this solid film to form additional layers of toning, a very slow process that diminishes as the film becomes thicker.

As author/chemist Weimar W. White has explained in various hobby publications, these films typically are very thin—25 to 125 nanometers (the thickness of this page is about 75,000 nanometers)! They often are shallower than some features on a coin's surface, such as die flow lines.

The schematic depicted in Figure 1 is the basis for the Pilling-Bedworth method of characterizing oxide films on metal surfaces as "protective" or "nonprotective." The Pilling-Bedworth (PB) ratio is computed as follows:

$$\text{PB ratio} = \frac{\text{oxide volume per metal atom}}{\text{metal volume per metal atom}} = \frac{(M_{\text{oxide}})(d_{\text{metal}})}{n(M_{\text{metal}})(d_{\text{oxide}})}$$

where: M = atomic or molecular mass

d = density = mass ÷ volume

n = number of metal atoms in the oxide

Although other properties are involved, the Pilling-Bedworth method provides a good rule of thumb and, in general, correctly predicts the formation of protective films on metals.

Figure 2 illustrates film formation on several metal surfaces as distinguished by the Pilling-Bedworth method. For example, the oxide film that forms on potassium (PB ratio = 0.45) is of insufficient volume to give complete surface coverage, resulting in rapid oxidation of this active metal. When the oxide film has a volume somewhat greater than that of the parent metal, as in the case of aluminum (PB ratio = 1.38), it forms a protective film. If the PB ratio is greater than 2, the exterior film develops stresses that often cause the oxide film to chip and break away from the metal, leaving the surface exposed to the environment. A prime example of this is the oxide film on iron (PB ratio = 2.14), which forms a very non-protective layer. (My calculations of PB ratios and expected film behavior for various other metals are summarized in Table 2.)

Figure 1: Before they can react with the coinage metal, environmental reactants, such as oxygen, water, carbon dioxide and hydrogen sulfide, must first penetrate the protective film, or patina, on the coin's surface, a very slow process unless the film has been broken.

Coinage Metals

ARMED WITH THE information presented in Tables 1 and 2, we now are in a position to better understand the reasoning behind the selection of coinage metals:

Copper. Although copper is fairly active chemically, it does tend to form protective films. As such, copper and its alloys (for example, copper-zinc bronzes and copper-nickel) have been common choices for coinage, both historically and geographically. However, when compared to gold and silver, copper has a greater incidence of corrosion and porosity.

Early United States copper coins were not alloyed with nickel, tin or zinc (which enhance corrosion resistance) and thus frequently exhibit chemistry-related problems. Copper planchets often contained impurities or were contaminated during their shipment from abroad, further increasing vulnerability to corrosion-related problems. This helps explain the rarity and premium value of nonporous, smooth-surfaced early half cents and large cents.

Aluminum. One would not expect aluminum to be a serious candidate for coinage, since it is substantially more reactive than copper. However, aluminum forms a very thin, impervious film that protects the underlying metal; therefore, aluminum and its alloys commonly have been used for coinage on a worldwide basis.

Iron. Iron, although chemically less active than aluminum, historically has not been used for coinage. This is due, in part, to the fact that the film that forms on the metal does not adequately protect it, thus leaving it vulnerable to continued attack in our environment. Stainless steel, an alloy of iron and chromium or nickel, is corrosion resistant, but difficult to work with. (However, coinage dies used in the minting of softer metals often are made of stainless steel.)

... COINS STRUCK FROM silver-copper alloys occasionally suffer surface porosity or roughness. Very likely this is related to nonhomogeneous alloying ...

Nickel. Nickel was introduced as a coinage metal in the United States in the late 1850s. Despite their silvery appearance, the first nickel 3- and 5-cent pieces (struck in the mid 1860s) were by weight composed of 75-percent copper/25-percent nickel. As noted in Table 2, both copper and nickel form protective films.

Silver. Typically alloyed with copper, silver has been an important component of United States coinage for well over a century and a half. With its composition (90-percent silver/10-percent copper), the alloy is rather inert chemically. In addition, Table 2 shows that protective oxide or sulfide films form (although silver sulfide is more prevalent, since oxides do not readily form on silver under ambient conditions).

Authors A. Butts and C.D. Coxé explain that silver sulfide films are not considered to be corrosive; rather, they create what is more appropriately called "tarnish" (a behavior entirely different from that of iron rust). Nevertheless, coins struck from silver-copper alloys occasionally suffer surface porosity or roughness. Very likely this is related to nonhomogeneous alloying and/or impurities in or on the alloys, resulting in preferential, local corrosion on the surface, particularly when exposed to harsh environments. (For example, silver-copper coins exposed to saltwater for extended periods of time often display pitting on their surfaces from leaching at vulnerable spots.)

Pilling-Bedworth Ratios for Selected Oxides and Sulfides

Iron (Fe)	Fe ₂ O ₃	2.14	Nonprotective
Aluminum (Al)	Al ₂ O ₃	1.38	Very Protective
Copper (Cu)	Cu ₂ O*	1.67	Protective

* In the case of copper and zinc oxides, the film chemistry proceeds further under typical ambient conditions. For copper, the protective cuprous oxide converts over time to protective patinas of basic copper sulphate and basic copper carbonate. Zinc oxide is converted to zinc hydroxide and then to basic zinc carbonate, a very protective film.

PATINA . . . OFTEN IS is associated with “original surfaces.” It not only is aesthetically appealing . . . , but also chemically protects the underlying metal.

Gold. United States gold coins typically are struck from an alloy of 90-percent gold/10-percent copper. As would be expected, coins struck from such an alloy are the most chemically stable. The alloy’s copper content does lead to occasional porosity, however, as described above for silver-copper coins. In addition, the copper content often contributes to the development of rich, warm toning of various golden hues.

Variations. During periods of war, the composition of coinage has varied because of critical needs for particular metals. For example, during World War II, U.S. nickels were struck in an alloy of 56-percent copper/35-percent silver/9-percent manganese. In 1943 cents were made of zinc-coated steel. Under typical ambient conditions, the zinc formed an impervious layer of zinc carbonate that protected the underlying steel (which otherwise would have rusted).

Patina and Cleaning

PATINA IS FOUND on both uncirculated and circulated coins, and often is associated with “original surfaces.” It not only is aesthetically appealing to many numismatists, but also chemically protects the underlying metal.

Although everyone has their personal preferences regarding toning on coins, I prefer original, uncleaned specimens. This is in agreement with metallurgical expert David Benjamin, who states that “the removal of protective films by chemical or mechanical means severely reduces the corrosion resistance of the metal surface.”

There is no simple answer to the question of whether a coin should be “cleaned,” mainly because the term has so many different meanings. For the purposes of discussion, I will divide this rather broad subject into three categories: 1) vigorous mechanical cleaning (physically disturbing a coin’s surface metal); 2) chemical cleaning (for example, dipping a coin in a harsh, tarnish-removing substance); and 3) washing or flushing (using a chemically inert solvent to gently remove dirt or other foreign material).

Some collectors might be inclined to remove a coin’s protective patina. The advice from experts: “Don’t do it!”

Poor Relation: The Half Cent of 1802

by R.W. Julian
ANA 29732

Struck on imported planchets and recycled copper cents when the Mint had no pressing obligations, the 1802 half cent commands a handsome price today.

Actual Size: 23.50mm

In 1797 the United States Mint struck more than 100,000 half cents, all of which bore the "Liberty Cap with Pole" design. The specimen above was struck on a planchet cut from an off-center cent.

ANA AUTHENTICATION BUREAU

IN HIS 1861 book, Coins, Medals, and Seals, W.C. Prime discussed United States half cents, assigning each coin a rarity rating from 1 to 6 (6 being the rarest). He gave the 1802 half cent a rating of 5. Today, it is worth thousands of dollars in Extremely Fine (EF-40), if it can be found in that condition. The 1996 sale of the Louis E. Eliasberg Sr. Collection, conducted by Auctions by Bowers and Merena, included a specimen in only Fine (F-12) grade, a curiosity in itself considering the superb condition of most of Eliasberg's coins. This piece, despite being in relatively poor condition by this legendary collector's standards, still brought $1,650, including the standard buyer's fee.

Although the 1802 half cent clearly is rare, half cents of similar vintage, such as the 1804 and 1808, are relatively common. The half cent was a poor relation in the early days of the Philadelphia Mint, struck only when public demand for other denominations was satisfied.

In 1797 the Philadelphia Mint coined more than 100,000 half cents, all carrying the "Liberty Cap with Pole" design. A few thousand more were struck in 1799 with the 1797 date. Beginning in 1795, the faces of United States silver and copper coins were changed with the adoption of the famous Draped Bust design. Chief Engraver Robert Scot had only so much time, however, and it was not until early 1800 that he cut new hubs for the half cent.

In the early part of 1800, the coiner's department at the Philadelphia Mint still was using the old dies of 1797, but these were phased out within a few weeks. The first 1800 Draped Bust half cents probably were minted around the beginning of May, although production was spotty. The half cents of 1800 are somewhat special in that they represent the first use of ready-made planchets purchased from outside the Mint. In fact, the planchets came all the way from Birmingham, England.

AS WAS USUAL for the times, Eckfeldt ordered that misstruck cents be gathered up to serve as raw material for a small quantity of half cents.

Great Britain's Matthew Boulton, a private coiner and copper manufacturer, had been shipping cent blanks to Philadelphia for more than two years, but this was his first delivery of half-cent planchets. Boudinot had worked a long time for this moment, for the Mint's rollers were in such bad shape that they had to be reserved as much as possible for gold and silver coinage. Because of strong public pressure for cent coins, it was not until December that Adam Eckfeldt, assistant coiner in charge of copper, once again was able to concentrate on half cents. By December 12, all the Boulton planchets had been struck. The Mint ran out of cent blanks about the same time.

In the early days of the United States Mint, little or nothing in the way of metal was wasted. As was usual for the times, Eckfeldt ordered that misstruck cents be gathered up to serve as raw material for a small quantity of half cents. About 3,600 such pieces were found and carefully rolled down; from each a half-cent blank was expertly cut. The planchets then were struck and delivered on December 12, 1800. It was the last half-cent coinage of the year.

To early Mint officials, a "misstrike" was either a brockage (a coin showing a mirror-image impression of another coin), an off-center coin, or one that was struck so lightly that the devices did not come up. It is believed that most of the early misstruck cents were the latter. Mint Director Elias Boudinot had given Matthew Boulton strict orders that the average weight of copper cent planchets not exceed 168 grains, particularly if the Mint was to make a good profit on its coinage. As a result, Boulton occasionally made planchets that were too thin. These yielded "misstruck" coins with weak impressions. (If struck too hard, the dies had a tendency to crack.)

There has been some speculation as to why the original cent design (called an "undertype") rarely shows through on the half-cent overstrikes. If a lightly struck cent coin was rolled down to half-cent thickness, very little of its design would remain. Once a planchet was struck with the half-cent dies, it would have

Once part of the Louis E. Eliasberg Sr. Collection, this 1802/0 half cent brought a noteworthy price at auction ($1,650), despite its dark, porous surface and overall Fine condition. The specimen was struck using reverse die #2.

You'll Receive FREE PCGS Grading And Important Coin Market Information

PCGS is launching a new program to enable everyone to have easier access to PCGS grading and provide all rare coin enthusiasts with important marketplace information. The program is in the form of a membership organization... The PCGS Collectors Club.

The PCGS Collectors Club was designed to provide you with more valuable marketplace information, more grading services, and more benefits than have ever been available before. The major components of PCGS Collectors Club membership are as follows:

Direct Grading Submissions To PCGS

Until now, if you wanted to submit your coins to PCGS for grading you did so through an authorized dealer. Since the dealers can help you screen and process your submissions, this is a good system and we still encourage everyone to use the PCGS Authorized Dealer Network for their submissions. However, some people either aren't close to an authorized dealer or simply want to do it themselves. If you're in either of those categories and prefer to deal directly with PCGS you can now do so as a member of the PCGS Collectors Club.

$100 Worth Of Free PCGS Grading

As a special, get acquainted with PCGS grading offer, all members of the PCGS Collectors Club receive four FREE grading submissions from PCGS (a $100 value). That's right! If you're a PCGS Collectors Club member, PCGS will grade four of your coins for FREE.

The PCGS Population Report

The monthly PCGS Population Report is one of the most important publications in the rare coin market. The "Pop Report" is a complete census of the more than 4,000,000 coins that have been graded by PCGS. The PCGS Population Report is the best way to compare the relative rarity of important coins. At any major coin show you'll hear dealers continually asking "What's the Pop?" before buying a coin. And the "Pop" they are referring to is the figure in the PCGS Population Report. All members of the PCGS Collectors Club receive one free copy of the PCGS Population Report.

PCGS is looking forward to working closely with all members of the PCGS Collectors Club. We will be offering special quarterly grading discounts to all club members, including periodic free grading offers. The first grading special for club members is free grading for all coins dated 1793.

Proof Sets: Are They a Good Buy?

Prices of proof sets are not as volatile as stocks on Wall Street, but they do have their ups and downs.

by Jim Majoros
ANA 122284

PROOF SETS CAN stir up interest in numismatics when the United States Mint unknowingly produces some with errors, such as the 1981-S proof set with the “clear S” mintmark, or the 1968-S set with the “no S” dime. Lucky purchasers of these sets saw them escalate in price very quickly. For example, the 1981-S proof set with the “clear S” mintmark sells for more than $150, while the 1968-S proof set currently is valued at approximately $6,500. (The U.S. Mint’s original price on the 1981-S set was $11; the 1968-S set was $5.)

However, your chances of finding an error in a U.S. Mint proof set are just about nil. Such mistakes are few and far between; the odds of finding one in the approximately 3 million sets produced each year are slim. But don’t let that deter you. You still can build a nice collection of proof sets—and you never know, you might get lucky!

The values of proof sets fluctuate in response to supply and demand. Many non-collectors—casual speculators buying sets for children or grandchildren—often find that after holding the sets for 10 to 15 years, their investments are worth only half of what they paid. Some are understandably discouraged and never again buy proof sets.

What makes a “proof” set different from an

An authentic 1977 proof set (top) is labeled “Packaged by U.S. Mint.” The 1936 proof set below is not in its original holder.

“uncirculated” set? Proof coins are special strikes produced for presentation, souvenir, exhibition or numismatic purposes. The term “proof” refers to the method of manufacture, not the condition of the coin. Regular production coins in mint state have brilliant, frosty luster, soft details and minor imperfections. Proof coins usually can be distinguished by their sharp detail and mirrorlike surfaces. All proofs originally are sold by the Mint at a premium.

The United States Mint produced its first proof set in 1936, pricing it at $1.89. Today the dealer “Greysheet” bid price for this set is more than $3,200. Only 3,837 originally were issued, and not many are extant 60 years later.

Proof set production increased every year from 1937 until 1957, when the Mint struck more than 1 million. The sets still were quite affordable, even in the 1950s, selling for only $2.10 each. The Mint temporarily suspended proof set production from 1943 through 1949, and again from 1965 through 1967 (although “special” mint sets were struck during the latter period).

From the early 1960s to the present, proof sets have been minted in quantities of at least 2.5 million annually. The regular 1986-S proof set is an exception; only 2,411,180 were produced. The highest numbers of sets were produced in 1976 and 1981. In 1976 more than 4 million regular sets and just under 4 million silver, three-piece sets were struck; 1981 proof set production again exceeded 4 million.

In 1968 the Mint raised the issue price from $2.10 to $5, and boosted it again in 1973 to $7. Another $2 increase came in 1977, and in 1980 the Mint once more upped the cost by a dollar. The $10 issue price had been in force for a year when the Mint decided to request $11 for the 1981-S sets. (Of course, that price was a bargain

ANYONE WHO BOUGHT a proof set from the United States Mint in 1964 or earlier, when the issue price was $2.10 or less, still can profit at today's prices.

.....

The 1976 three-piece silver proof set commemorates the bicentennial of the United States. The reverse design on the quarter dollar features a Colonial drummer boy facing left, with a victory torch encircled by 13 stars at the upper left. Except for the dual dating, 1776-1976, the obverse remained unchanged.

for those fortunate enough to receive a set with all the coins displaying "clear S" mintmarks.) The $11 issue price was stable until 1993, when the price rose to its current level of $12.50.

Anyone who bought a proof set from the U.S. Mint in 1964 or earlier, when the issue price was $2.10 or less, still can profit at today's prices. Proof sets from 1953 to 1955 command at least $55; sets dated 1952 and earlier sell for anywhere from $100 to $3,000. However, those struck in 1968 and sold for $5, now bring about $4. Except for the 1970-S, all proof sets dated in the '70s currently sell below issue price. The same holds true for the '80s, except the set minted in 1986, which had the lowest mintage in years. The 1986-S is the only set that has held its issue price of $11, but just barely.

Sets in the '90s command slightly more than the issue price, except the 1990-S and 1996-S. The Mint reduced the number of sets beginning in 1990 to under 3 million, whereas all sets minted in the '80s, with the exception of two, were struck in greater quantities. Consequently, most of the 1990s sets hold their prices.

For the hobby enthusiast, proof sets are beautiful to admire and make wonderful gifts. Overall, they are not for investors, but if their value increases after purchase, all the better!

A Small Mill in Savage, Maryland

The numismatic history of the Savage Manufacturing Company reflects the development of business and industry in the United States.

by Arthur Crowmer
ANA 124585

THE STORY OF the Savage Manufacturing Company is a story of success in industry and recycling, with a large measure of numismatics adding flavor to the tale. The story begins in approximately 1810 in Howard County, Maryland, on the north bank of the Little Patuxent River. A cornerstone was laid there for a textile mill that would manufacture a variety of duck, canvas and other cloth products.

According to Vera Filby's 1965 history of Savage, Maryland, George Williams, along with his brothers and several associates, developed a cotton mill at the falls of the Little Patuxent. The mill (and town) were named after John Savage, a friend of George Williams who had loaned money for construction of the plant. The incorporation act of the Savage Manufacturing Company specified the firm's objectives as "the manufacturing and vending of cotton goods." Capital stock was to be $150,000, and members of the Williams family were proprietors of two-thirds of the stock.

The original cotton mill, powered by a 30-foot water wheel, was a three-story structure of native stone. Streets were laid out, and homes were built for the mill workers. Filby writes that by 1825 the mill had 1,000 spindles and 120 power looms in operation and employed 200 people.

Growth and Decline

IN ADDITION TO the textile mill, the Williams family built a grist mill, iron foundry and machine shop. It appears these facilities were related to the mill's operation during its initial development. As their services were no longer required, or became cost prohibitive, the work either was absorbed by the mill (for example, the machine shop) or simply discontinued.

THE BALDWIN FAMILY controlled the operation of the Savage Mill Company from that point . . . and greatly influenced many aspects of the town.

Initially, raw materials and final products were hauled to and from Baltimore and the mill by teamsters. In 1833 the Maryland General Assembly approved construction of a railroad from Baltimore to Washington, D.C. This branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was completed in 1835, and Savage Station was established approximately 1 mile from the mill. For more than 50 years, oxen hauled material and goods from the station to the factory. In 1877 a railroad spur was built directly to the mill complex.

In 1853 members of the Savage family filed a complaint for payment of a $20,000 loan made to the Savage Manufacturing Company 30 years earlier. This ultimately led to the public auction of the mill and improved lands to William H. Baldwin Jr. in 1859. The following year, Baldwin purchased the remaining 566 acres from the Savage Manufacturing Company. The Baldwin family controlled the operation of the Savage Mill Company from that point until the mill closed, and greatly influenced many aspects of the town.

The mill survived the Civil War, even with the diminished supplies of raw cotton. According to Filby, during this era "the Savage factory was overhauled and put into full operating condition. In 1864 iron-working was resumed and continued for ten years . . . The foundry at the Savage mill specialized in cotton manufacturing machinery not only for the Savage mill but for others." Steam power was installed in 1880, and the following year the mill was greatly expanded.

The mill continued to prosper

The Franklin Institute Award

.....

IN 1825 A COMMITTEE for the Mechanic Arts of the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia awarded the Savage factory a silver medal for the excellence and beauty of a box of lace produced there. The actual medal probably is the piece cataloged by researcher R.W. Julian in Medals of the United States Mint: The First Century, 1792-1892 as AM-17 under "Agricultural, Mechanical, Scientific, and Professional Medals."

The whereabouts of the actual Savage medal is not known. Maybe one day it will resurface, perhaps at public auction. •

In 1825 the Savage factory was awarded a silver medal by the Mechanic Arts committee of the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia. Although the whereabouts of the medal is unknown, it may resemble the bronze Franklin Institute award medal struck by the United States Mint (pictured) and cataloged by R.W. Julian.

Savage Store Scrip

THE SAVAGE MANUFACTURING Company issued notes in denominations of 25 cents, 50 cents, $1 and $2. The scrip was printed by Danforth, Underwood & Company (of New York)/Underwood, Bald, Spencer & Hufty (of Philadelphia), prior to 1851 (likely between 1836 and 1843). The scrip gives the company's location as Anne Arundel County; the land on which it was situated became part of Howard County by an act of the legislature in 1851.

Savage notes probably were ordered by the Williams brothers, who owned the mill and perhaps the company store. According to information in A Catalogue of Maryland's Paper Money, 1790-1865, only one circulating note, with signatures, is known to exist. One of the signers was C.D. Williams.

The Baldwin family also owned a grocery and dry goods store. Explains historian Vera Ruth Filby, this store "no doubt reclaimed much of what little cash the mill families had to spend from their thin pay envelopes." The existence of a company store appears to have predated the Baldwins' ownership, as the mill did not come into their hands until 1859.

Mill scrip was used at the store. According to Ellie Butehorn, director of marketing for today's restored Historic Savage Mill, employees could be paid in either scrip or United States currency. However, if the employee had an unpaid account at the Baldwins' grocery or dry goods store, they were required to accept payment in scrip. Obviously, this practice ensured that payment would be received, as the notes could be redeemed only at the store.

Proof notes of the Savage Manufacturing Company were part of Christie's September 14 and 15, 1990, sale of Early American bank notes (1810-74) from the archives of American Bank Note Company. (The catalog of this sale is highly sought by collectors of obsolete currency.) When available, these proof notes sell for $150 to $250.

The Savage Manufacturing Company issued scrip in denominations of (from top) 25 cents, 50 cents, $1 and $2, most likely between 1836 and 1843. MARYLAND HISTORICAL SOCIETY under the management of the Baldwin family. Between 1914 and 1915, an electric power plant was added; however, the river continued to supply the power that drove the 100- and 750-kilowatt generators. An additional 123,000 square feet of floor space was created the following year, and larger looms were installed.

World War I brought additional military contracts for a variety of types and sizes of cotton duck and canvas. After the war, the prosperity of the mill mirrored that of the country. The Savage Manufacturing Company thrived in the 1920s and, with some belt-tightening, survived the '30s. World War II brought renewed activity. Filby states that production peaked during the Second World War, when the mill employed 400 people and turned out 400,000 pounds of finished cloth per month.

After the war, decreased demand, the beginnings of labor and management problems, and the advanced age of the factory finally caught up with the Savage Manufacturing Company. By August 1947, production was suspended, and by the end of the year, the mill closed.

Santa Heim, Merriland

HARRY A. HEIM, OWNER of a firm that made Christmas tree ornaments, bought the property of the Savage Manufacturing Company in 1948. Heim dreamed of transforming part of Savage into a Christmas village with a permanent holiday display. Filby writes, "Machinery for making ornaments had been installed in the old factory and about 400 people were working there." Special trains brought parents and children to the town, which had been renamed "Santa Heim, Merriland." The post office was repainted in red and white, and decorated for Christmas; thousands of children sent Christmas letters there. By 1950 the dream of a Christmas theme park had died, and with it dependency on the mill as the town's livelihood.

The Town and Its Inhabitants

UNTIL 1947 THE histories of the mill and the town were intertwined. The factory took care of its employees' basic needs in exchange for their Looms—as well as generations of Savage Manufacturing Company workers—faded from the scene in the late 1940s, after supplying cloth for clipper ships' sails, tents and other equipment for armies in the Civil War and World Wars I and II, and even backdrops for early Hollywood films. Today the Historic Savage Mill houses retail establishments and antique shops, carrying on the scrip tradition by issuing "Savage Bucks" good toward purchases from any of the marketplace's merchants.

loyalty and labor. The first houses for workers were built at the same time as the mill or shortly thereafter. Additional housing was constructed as needed. In the early 1900s, the company installed water and sewer lines, and built a plant to provide electric lighting. Construction of tenant houses continued into the 1920s. Filby notes that as late as World War II, homes were rented to mill employees for less than $2 a week.

As long as employees were willing to live within parameters, the company and the Baldwin family would provide for them. The Baldwins, through the company, influenced almost every aspect of community life. For example, selling or giving away intoxicating liquors was prohibited as part of lease agreements for property owned by the Baldwin family.

The company sold ice, cordwood and coal to the villagers. Its farm supplied apples and rented stable space—at $1 a month—to citizens who owned cows or horses. A company policeman served as night watchman at the factory, patrolling the streets of Savage as well. In 1888 the company helped with construction of the town's Methodist church. The following year, the company built the Masonic Hall for community use.

In 1921 the Baldwin family built the Carroll Baldwin Memorial Community Hall, which also served as the town library. The same year, the County Board of Education, the citizens of Savage, and the Savage Manufacturing Company built an elementary and junior high school, replacing a frame structure on the same site. Earlier, school was held in the basement, and first and second floors of the Masonic Hall. Students sat on long benches—one set for girls, one for boys—facing the wall. Filby states that during the early era, mills employed children as young as eight and worked them from sunrise to sunset and there is no reason to suppose that this did not happen in Savage. Indeed, there are still residents of Savage who remember grandparents who went to work at the age of ten or twelve and earned four dollars a month. It was characteristic of textile industries, in which many operations were considered light enough for women and children, that whole families worked in the mills and continued to do so from one generation to the next.

During the 1890s, mill workers earned 5 to 10 cents per hour and had a 55-hour week. By 1915 the entry-level wage had risen to 75 cents a day, and by 1947 the company paid a minimum starting wage of 73 cents per hour, while machinists earned $1.18 per hour.

Historic Savage Mill

THE MILL BUILDINGS continued to fade. In 1965 Filby wrote sadly and lovingly that "the old mill cannot be used in its present dilapidated state, and from the river it looks forlorn and abandoned. Windows are broken and wild grape vines climb through. The water wheel is gone. The land, with its relentless fertility, is beginning to close in . . . But there it stands, a relic of early industrial America, a record in native stone and European brick of the life of a little Maryland village."

Filby's description could have served as the mill's epitaph, save for Samuel, Hyman, Ephraim and Albert Winer, who also shared a dream of bringing the buildings back to life. They transformed the historic 19th-century textile mill into a speciality marketplace and antique center. Further renovations are planned, and someday the water wheel may again turn. I am certain Vera Ruth Filby would be very pleased. •

Hidden Here and There

IN THE COURSE of researching my recent book, American Coin Treasures and Hoards, I discovered that rare numismatic treasures are where you find them, and that can be just about anywhere! Over the years, valuable coins have been found in many unusual places, often as much by chance as by intention.

Maine Half Dollar Hoard

In 1963 a group of about 2,000 Capped Bust half dollars of various dates, but mostly dated in the 1820s and 1830s, was brought to John Jay Ford Jr. at New Netherlands Coin Company, 1 West 47th Street, New York. The seller was Canadian dealer Fred Samuels, who said the hoard had come from Maine, where it had been hidden for more than a century. Ford speculated that the coins might have been hidden by someone fearful of banks during the financial panic of 1837-38.

Some of these halves—but not the best ones—were cataloged and appeared as part of “a splendid run of half dollars” in New Netherlands’ Sale 57 of December 10-11, 1963, mixed with material from other consignments. The catalog made no mention of a hoard.

Of the Maine hoard half dollars, about 150 to 200 were “absolute gems” and were reserved for the New Netherlands Coin Company inventory. Most of these selected pieces remained with Charles M. Wormser of New Netherlands, and in the 1980s were sold by his widow (acting on the advice of dealer Lester Merkin) to a West Coast dealer. The best of these coins were dated 1831 and made their way into the market through various transactions.

Meanwhile, about 1,000 coins averaging Extremely Fine and About Uncirculated were wholesaled by New Netherlands to Philadelphia dealers Harry J. Forman and Ruth Bauer, who paid $15 apiece and later sold many of them to New York dealer Edwin Shapiro. Shapiro, in turn, consigned them to New Netherlands’ 66th sale of July 21-22, 1976, by which time the firm was operated solely by Wormser, Ford having retired. Beginning with Lot 28 and ending with Lot 747, the pieces appeared individually as well as in multiple-coin lots under the title “Extraordinary Collection of Bust Half Dollars—Possibly the Largest Ever Offered at Public Auction,” again with no specific mention of the Maine hoard.

The Woodpile Find

On February 6, 1900, George Norwood of Dalton, Michigan, found a “rare collection of old coins, presumably stolen,” and believed to be quite valuable. The pieces had been concealed in a woodpile in a stand of trees next to the C.K. & S. Railway. The pile had been stacked the year before, and it was presumed that the pieces were hidden at that time, perhaps “the loot of some distant robbery.”

Dr. George F. Heath, founder (in 1888) and editor of The Numismatist, learned of the find and passed the information along to George W. Rice, a Detroit collector who today is remembered for his unprecedented hoard of 756 specimens of the famous 1856 Flying Eagle cent (dispersed in the market in 1911). For many years, Rice stood ready to buy from collectors, dealers and at auction any example of this coin in any grade.

Rice’s inspection of the woodpile find revealed the following coins:

- U.S. 1803 copper cent
- 14 various U.S. cents, dated 1819-54
- 92 Canadian coppers (presumably tokens), dated 1844-62
- Prince Edward Island token, dated 1857
- Norway 2 ore, dated 1861

Actual Size: 32.5mm

About 150 to 200 pieces of a Maine hoard of Capped Bust half dollars, dated in the 1820s and '30s, were “absolute gems.”

- Denmark 1/2 skilling, dated 1847
- English coin dated 1822, not otherwise described
- Two German 1 pfennig and two 2 pfennig, not described
- Chinese cash coin, not described
- Two coins worn smooth, not described
- Netherlands coin, not described

Rice summarized that there was "a total of 119 pieces all in ordinary condition from fair to good, which could be duplicated for about $2.50."

Thus, the group, rather than being a "rare collection of old coins," was instead a miscellaneous accumulation presumably gathered in 1862 or later, and for some unknown reason removed to a woodpile in 1899. Quite possibly the coins were brought to Michigan from Canada—not far from the place of discovery—as there were few copper-nickel cents, but quite a few large copper cents. In 1862 there was a glut of United States copper cents north of the border.

Surprise in a Dog Pen

In July 1996, Betty Brauer struck it rich! Until that time, her greatest stroke of luck was finding a $5 bill while shoveling snow. The Valmy, Wisconsin, lady had been pulling weeds around a pen she was preparing for her beagles near the home she and her husband had owned for 33 years. There, exposed in the earth, was a gleaming treasure, hidden years earlier in a fruit jar, which upon inspection was found to consist of 21 gold and 29 silver coins.

Dealer Mike Worcheck of Card & Coin Corner in Green Bay examined the coins and pronounced them to be worth more than $7,000.

George Evenson, president of the Door County Historical Society, conjectured that the coins had been buried by former owners who did not trust banks. From the dates on the coins, the pieces had been put away as much as 80 years before. It was believed that a thrifty couple had lived there. Betty Brauer remembered that there had been a hint of such a find years ago when her sons found some old silver dollars while digging for night crawlers.

Perhaps displaying more sense than the earlier owners of the house, Mr. and Mrs. Brauer quickly took the coins to their local bank and placed them in a safe-deposit box. •

Lucy Pickens: Portrait of a Lady

AMONG THOSE PORTRAYED on Confederate currency are prominent generals, cabinet officers and governors—and one charming Southern lady, Lucy Petway Holcombe Pickens. A July 1918 article in The Numismatist confirmed that she was the only woman to be accorded that honor.

Early writers on the Confederate States of America (CSA) paper series identified the woman portrayed on a $1 Confederate note dated June 2, 1862, as Lucy Pickens. Prior to 1918, the portrait on $100 notes dated December 2, 1862, February 17, 1863, and April 6, 1863, was said to show Varina Banks Howell Davis, wife of CSA President Jefferson Davis. This attribution appeared in early literature, including works on Confederate currency by John W. Haseltine, Dr. William Lee, Dr. George W. Massamore and Raphael P. Thian.

In his article in the July 1918 issue of The Numismatist, H.D. Allen concluded that the woman on the $100 note was Mrs. Pickens, based partially on a comparison of the note's vignette with photographs of Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Pickens. Allen credited South Carolina's Christopher Gustavus Memminger (1803-88), Confederate secretary of the treasury, with the decision to put Lucy Pickens on Confederate currency.

Allen obtained affidavits from several people who knew Mrs. Pickens and affirmed she was the woman on the note. Two nieces had framed $100 notes hung on a wall along with pictures of their aunt. A cousin had a bill in a scrapbook. The family didn't need reference books to know their honored relative appeared on a Confederate note.

Lucy Petway Holcombe was born on June 11, 1832, on a cotton plantation at La Grange in Fayette County, Tennessee, the daughter of prosperous land owners Beverly Lafayette Holcombe and Eugenia Dorothea Hunt. The family later moved to a larger property at Wyalucing, another Southern mansion, in Marshall, Texas. Lucy received a proper education at Bethlehem Female Seminary in Pennsylvania.

A charming and attractive Southern belle, Lucy attended grand balls in Jackson, New Orleans and Vicksburg. She is described as a woman of perfect figure, clear complexion and graceful carriage, with a full head of titian hair. The Mississippi legislature once recessed in her honor.

Finding a suitable husband took a little effort. Her mother took her to White Sulphur Springs, Virginia, a popular destination for Southern ladies and gentlemen seeking the perfect mate. There she was introduced to Francis Wilkinson Pickens.

Pickens came from a strong line of Southern gentlemen; his grandfather was Revolutionary War General Andrew Pickens (1739-1817). Of the reticent general, it was said, "He would first take the words out of his mouth, between his fingers, and examine them before he uttered them."

The second Andrew Pickens (1779-1838), son of the general, served as governor of South Carolina from 1816-18 and was married to Susanah Smith Wilkinson. Their son Francis was born on April 7, 1805, in St. Paul's Parish, Colleton District, South Carolina.

Francis Pickens attended Franklin College in Georgia and South Carolina College. After his admission to the bar in 1828, he became a law partner with Eldred Simkins and a marriage partner with Simkins' daughter, Margaret Eliza. Using inherited wealth, they established a large estate, "Edgewood," near Edgefield Court House. Margaret died in 1842 after bearing eight children.

Pickens was elected to the state legislature in 1832, served in the United States House of Representatives from December 8, 1834, through March 3, 1843, and returned to the state senate in 1844-46. He was an advocate of states rights and a leader in the South Carolina secessionist movement. Pickens married Marion Antoinette Dearing and had another child. He was a delegate to the Nashville convention of 1850-51, where Southern rights and secession were discussed. He was president of the state delegation to the 1856 Democratic National Convention that nominated James Buchanan for president.

Lucy Holcombe agreed to marry Francis Pickens if he accepted President Buchanan's appointment as minister to Russia. They married at her home, Wyalucing, on April 26, 1858. At the time of their marriage, she was 25 and he was 52.

Lucy charmed the Russians and received expensive gifts from the tsar and tsarina. It was in the Imperial palace at St. Petersburg that their daughter, Francesca Eugenia Olga Neva, was born on March 14, 1859. The names Olga and Neva were given in honor of the infant's godmothers, both granddutchesses of Russia; however, she was known almost exclusively as "Douschka," Russian for "darling." A salute was fired, and the Imperial band played in honor of her birth.

The couple returned home in 1860, as secessionist sentiments grew. The South Carolina legislature elected Pickens governor, and he began his service on December 17, 1860. Before long, the conflict with the federal government reached a crisis, and on December 20, 1860, South Carolina became the first state to secede from the Union.

Governor Pickens asked President Buchanan to turn over federal forts in the Charleston harbor to state control. On December 26, 1860, Major Robert Anderson withdrew federal troops from the vulnerable Fort Moultrie to Fort Sumter, which was situated on an island in the harbor. Pickens seized coastal forts and a federal arsenal before turning his attention to Fort Sumter. On January 9, Pickens ordered the guns to repel the Star of the West, which had come to resupply the fort. These can be considered the opening shots of the American Civil War.

The Confederacy took over responsibility for action against Fort Sumter on February 9, removing Governor Pickens from the loop. Finally, on April 12, 1861, the Confederacy opened fire on Fort Sumter. After the fort had withstood a 34-hour bombardment with 4,000 shells, Anderson lowered the federal flag. The fort was surrendered without loss of life on either side.

Lucy Pickens, a gracious hostess and skilled diplomat who entertained soldiers, government officials and foreign visitors, earned the name "Queen of the Confederacy." A gifted musician, she also spoke well on history, literature and the Bible. The governor's mansion at Columbia was furnished with European statues and paintings, including a full-length portrait presented by Russian Tsar Alexander II.

During the war, Lucy sold her jewelry to support a regiment that was named the "Holcombe Legion" in her honor. Dressed in a black-velvet robe and plumed hat, riding horseback, she reviewed the regiment and presented it with a large, blue-silk battle flag. When she toured the military camp at Adams Run, the soldiers escorted her to the train station and fired a salute in her honor. The regiment suffered heavy casualties at the second battle of Bull Run (Manassas).

Francis Pickens' extravagance and mismanagement eventually landed him deeply in debt. He died at Edgewood on January 25, 1869. After his death, Lucy traveled little, but entertained old Southern friends and Northern carpetbaggers at their home. She served as a regent for the Mount Vernon Association and raised money for a Confederate monument at Edgefield. Lucy Pickens died on August 8, 1899.

The Pickens' house and garden were dismantled and moved 23 miles to Aiken, a resort town for Northern tourists. More about the life of this Southern beauty can be found in Brent Hughes' article, "Lucy Pickens Became 'Queen of the South,'" in the August 1997 issue of Bank Note Reporter. •

Greek Imperial Coinage

THE TERM "GREEK Imperial" is familiar to most collectors of ancient coinage, but much confusion exists over its precise meaning. It has been argued, with some justification, that these issues are neither Greek nor Imperial, but ever since the term was popularized in Barclay Head's epic Historia Numorum (Oxford, 1911), it has been difficult to refer to these coins in any other way.

In simple terms, this series represents the local coinages of the Roman Empire. The majority came from mints in the eastern Mediterranean, especially Asia Minor, many of which had independent numismatic traditions stretching back centuries, long before Rome became mistress of the Orient. Initiated by Augustus, Roman Imperial coinage was struck mostly at Rome up to the mid 3rd century A.D. and was current throughout the Empire. The base-metal denominations (sestertius, dupondius, as, etc.) normally circulated in the western provinces.

In the East, small change was provided by the issues of hundreds of mints, large and small—usually bearing an imperial effigy on the obverse, and an inscription and motif of purely local significance on the reverse. The obverse and reverse inscriptions generally were in Greek, but at mints where Roman colonies had been established, they were in Latin. At such mints, reverse themes were less varied and usually conformed to strictly defined "colonial" designs, such as a colonist with plow; military standards; and a wolf suckling twins.

The supply of silver coinage in the eastern provinces was augmented by issues from a much smaller number of cities, foremost among them the "cistophoric" mints of Roman Asia (Ephesus, Pergamum, etc., striking triple denarii); Caesarea in Capadocia (producing a range of silver denominations from the tridrachm down to the hemidrachm); and the Syrian capital of Antioch (issuing the tetradrachm).

Continuing the traditions of the Ptolemaic kings, the great Egyptian metropolis of Alexandria also produced vast quantities of debased silver coinage (billon tetradrachms), though there was a 50-year gap between the downfall of Cleopatra and resumption of issues under Tiberius. Bronze drachms and smaller denominations exhibiting an amazing diversity of types also were struck by the Alexandria mint, but the coinage as a whole was intended for circulation solely within Egypt, a unique province that was administered as a private estate of the emperor.

Another important group of issues belonging to Greek Imperial coinage is the so-called "quasi-autonomous" series. These coins omit all reference to the reigning Roman emperor and were produced only in the name of the issuing city. This privilege would seem to have been granted by the emperors to a large number of communities, but such types normally represent only a small proportion of the total output of any particular mint.

On the reverse of a bronze "medallion" of Severus Alexander, from the mint of Acrasus in Lydia, is a portrayal of Demeter and Dionysus (left). The reverse of a bronze medallion of Caracalla, from the mint of Philippopolis in Thrace (right), shows Heracles and commemorates the Alexandrian Pythian games of A.D. 214.

Reverse themes include a city gateway on a bronze of Commodus from Anchialus in Thrace (top) and an eagle on a silver tetradrachm of Septimius Severus struck at Laodicea.

The reverses of the Greek Imperial coinage present a bewildering variety of designs, ranging the full gamut of conventional representations of gods and goddesses; and local deities, including city goddesses and river gods. Other motifs include architectural types, principally temples, but also bridges, city gates, triumphal arches, harbors and lighthouses; animals, real and mythological; ships and boats; famous sons of the issuing city; or mythological subjects related to the area. Perhaps most important are agonistic types commemorating local festivals and games (many smaller communities restricted their production of coinage to such occasions).

The accompanying inscriptions—often long and seemingly complex in their employment of abbreviations—amply repay careful study, as they contain much fascinating information. The names of hundreds of local magistrates are recorded. Although most of these individuals are otherwise quite unknown to us today, they represent the upper echelons of society in the prosperous Graeco-Roman communities of the 1st through mid 3rd centuries A.D. These inscriptions also shed light on the names of the various local games and festivals, which seem to have played such an important part in the lives of these communities—about 60 in all!

Dates based on some local era quite frequently are employed as a reverse design element, and these can sometimes be of great value in providing precise chronological data. Almost every coin in the Alexandrian series bears a date, though they are reckoned by the year of the emperor's rule in Egypt.

In the past, "Greek Imperials" received only scant attention from history students, collectors and dealers. The problem has always been one of satisfactory arrangement and presentation. This coinage was seldom, if ever, regarded as a separate series in its own right. Purists tended to view it as the final stage in the "decline" of the Greek coinage or, alternatively, as an obscure supplement to the Roman Imperial series.

Fifteen years ago, I attempted to begin the process of remedying this unfortunate misconception through the publication of my Greek Imperial Coins and Their Values (Seaby, 1982). I adopted a new approach to the subject by making the primary arrangement chronological and then dealing with the issues of each emperor in the usual geographical sequence—west to east. Such an arrangement, like any other, has its drawbacks. It at least focused attention on the true nature and function of this coinage, that is, a local supplement to the regular issues of Imperial Rome serving the needs of provincial communities, principally in the East, and frequently in connection with the celebration of local festivals and games.

This change in the perception of Greek Imperials took a huge step forward a decade later with the publication of the first volume of the monumental Roman Provincial Coinage by Andrew Burnett, Michel Amandry and Pere Pau Ripolles (British Museum/Bibliothèque Nationale de Paris, 1992). This magnificent work, representing the very best in modern numismatic scholarship, also took a chronological approach. However, instead of attempting to deal with the coinage reign by reign, the authors prudently decided to handle their subject period by period, thus alleviating many of the problems associated with the attribution of individual types to specific reigns.

The first volume covers approximately the same period as the first volume of Roman Imperial Coinage, the standard reference on the regular issues of Imperial Rome (Julio-Claudians to Vitellius). The authors of Roman Provincial Coinage have, in fact, stated their intention that the work be used in conjunction with Roman Imperial Coinage to provide a sourcebook for all the coinage produced under the Roman emperors.

Other volumes of Roman Provincial Coinage are in preparation. With the Greek Imperial series at last having established its rightful place as part of the rich fabric of Roman Imperial civilization, I would certainly recommend numismatists become involved in the study of a coinage that is second to none in its bewildering diversity and an excellent value for the collector's dollar. •

Madonna of the Medal

HAVE YOU EVER wondered what the result would be, if a hallowed voice cried out from the heavens and said, "Make me a medal"? Wonder no more.

According to some theologians, a young Roman Catholic postulant heard such a call. It depends on whose glasses one wears while reading the story of the medal said to have been designed in Heaven before giving it creed-bound acceptance. You may read the story through the eyes of a true believer or those of a skeptic. Your personal faith may dictate how you accept the word of the church for this story.

The one thing that cannot be denied is that the medal has an intriguing story. Its earthly issuance has led to the elevation of one person to sainthood and the conversions and subsequent ordinations of two others.

Zoé Labouré was born in Fain-les-Moutiers, France, on May 2, 1806, the ninth of 17 children. Her father was a prosperous farmer; her mother died before Zoé reached her teens.

Although she received no formal education, at the age of 12 the little girl assumed management of the household, which included 5 family members and 13 hired men. When she was 18, her father sent her to work as a waitress at her uncle's restaurant in Paris. Unhappy and spiritually unfulfilled, Zoé fled her uncle's house and sought sanctuary within the convent of the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul at Chantillon-sur-Seine. When she was sent to their novitiate on the rue du Bac in Paris, she chose Catherine for her name in religious service.

Little is recorded of Catherine's day-to-day activities at the novitiate. To her superiors, she seemed distant, almost apathetic to her surroundings. Catherine's only confidant was her confessor, Monsignor J.M. Aladel. It was to Aladel that she eventually confessed she had been experiencing divine visitations, three from the Virgin Mary.

The first apparition, according to Catherine, took place in the chapel of the convent late on the evening of July 18, 1830. Catherine confided that Mary appeared to her for a period of two hours offering spiritual advice, predicting world calamities, and speaking of a special mission for the young girl.

Catherine experienced two more visits. Later the same year, on November 27, Mary appeared again. The young postulant saw her standing on a white globe, crushing a serpent beneath her foot. Rays of light, symbolizing the graces, flowed from Mary's jeweled, outstretched hands. An oval frame formed around her with the words "O Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee." Then, the oval turned. On the reverse, Catherine saw a monogram in the form of the letter M, surmounted by a bar and a cross. Below were two hearts—one of Jesus, with a crown of thorns; the other of Mary, pierced by a dagger. An oval border of 12 stars completed the design.

Then, as the vision began to fade, Catherine heard Mary's voice speak out, "Have a medal made after this

The design of this medal is said to have been inspired by the spiritual vision of Catherine Labouré, a young 19th-century postulant. It depicts Mary standing upon a globe, crushing a serpent beneath her foot. In the vision, Mary promised "great graces" to all who wear the medal. The date 1830 marks the year of Catherine's first vision of Mary.

model. All who wear it will receive great graces. They should wear it around the neck."

After the third and last visit, recorded as having occurred in September 1831, Catherine went to her confessor and told him that she had been admonished by Mary for allowing nearly a year to pass without having fulfilled her request.

With the permission of the Archbishop of Paris, models based on Catherine's vision were made. With her approval, dies were engraved, and the first medals were struck on June 30, 1832. Within a short time, so many favors were granted to wearers of the medal that it became known as the "Miraculous Medal."

Church authorities, dubious of the claims at first, convened a canonical board of inquiry at Paris in 1836.

The board eventually concurred and certified the medal's supernatural design as authentic. The medal rapidly gained popularity, and in 1847 the Association of the Children of Mary was founded, adopting the medal as its badge of membership.

It took more than Catherine Labouré's vision, however, to get papal approval for the medal. In 1842 a young Jewish banker was traveling to Rome to visit his estranged brother. Alphonse Ratisbonne, scion of an important Jewish family in France, was bitterly disappointed over his brother Theodore's conversion to the Roman Catholic faith. On his way to visit Theodore, Alphonse was inexplicably drawn to the Church of St. Andrea della Fratte in Rome. Here, he said, he experienced a vision similar to Catherine Labouré's. Papal approval of the issue soon followed. The two brothers subsequently founded a number of religious orders.

Catherine Labouré eventually received the habit of the order and worked quietly and humbly at a hospice for elderly men in Enghien. It was not until her death in 1876 that people learned she was the sister who had seen the apparitions. On July 12, 1947, she was canonized by Pope Pius XII, who called her the "saint of silence."

Whether one gives credence to visions and miracles, or the infallibility of papal decree, the story of the Madonna of the Medal is an intriguing one. Many believe the "Miraculous Medal" has the power to work miracles, and that its design descended from Heaven. •

Investment Scams Abound

IF YOU HAVEN'T heard much about coin-investment schemes lately, it probably is because promoters have become more sophisticated in their approach and have cleaned up their acts a bit.

Scam artists are not stupid. They change with the times and attempt to sell only items that hold the greatest appeal for potential investors. They provide what their clients believe will make them a financial killing—real estate, precious metals, coins or gemstones. The usual motivators are greed and a hope for fast profits.

The marketers who deal in this kind of material have no real appreciation for coins. Whatever is hot at the moment is good for their kind of operation. In 1979-80, when coins were increasing in value, it was easy to sell any kind of coin as an investment. Later, the emphasis changed to Morgan dollars, then to high-grade coins, and more recently to rare dates or even "rare" condition. Today's most popular scam coins seem to be generic gold pieces that are fairly accurately graded but terribly overpriced.

Selling decent coins at inflated prices is one way of getting around the old problems of misrepresenting an item's grade or rarity. It is much harder to establish in court that prices are too high, or that the market might not someday make the coins a worthwhile purchase. When shielded by these new gimmicks, most scam marketers avoid the kind of national attention they received 10 or 20 years ago.

Recently I heard about someone who tried to sell a group of $2½ gold pieces a few weeks after purchasing them for $8,000. They ended up selling them to a dealer for their realistic value of $1,600. The dealer said this is not an isolated case, and I have heard similar stories from other dealers.

Is there any way we can stop people from selling coins for over-inflated prices? Probably not, but we all can do our part in educating the public. Tell friends and acquaintances about the legitimate side of the industry and how to locate dealers who will make competitive offerings of properly graded coins.

File #528

I could scarcely believe this attempt to dupe the unwary. It came in the form of a personalized, hand-written letter to a reader, who forwarded it to me. The letter-writer, who claims to be in prison, is looking for a small loan of money and coins to use as a stake in setting up a coin business when he gets out of jail. Just a few hundred dollars supposedly will help him get back to normal daily life.

The coins will be sorted and graded by a niece who will sell them to members of her church. The prisoner is not exactly certain of being released, but if he is, he wants to have a little nest egg and business ready for the future. He will let you know his address after he learns where he will be located if he is transferred from Atlanta.

Perhaps I am reading too much into this offer, but frankly I would not touch it. I wonder if the same letter was sent to many other collectors. Maybe we should start a fund to get this prisoner into some other line of business.

Now you can own not only genuine platinum coins, but also a giant, quarter-pound proof replica made by an entity not associated with the United States Mint. There is a basic problem here. The replica is not a real coin, and it is not made of platinum, but it got plenty of attention in a full-page ad in USA Today. The Pseudo Mint claims it will strike only 100,000 pieces, and that over-subscription is a virtual certainty. That means you may have to hurry if you want to get one of these "paper-weights" to add to your collection.

The unusual thing about this novelty is that it marks the first attempt to make a knock-off replica of the United States platinum bullion coin. You have to give this company high marks for ingenuity. And you can continue to wonder why our government does not copyright its designs so promoters cannot get away with such things. Surely this kind of an offer must be confusing to the general public. It can only hurt sales of the genuine coins, which actually are made of platinum and sell for much higher prices.

These replicas are made from .999 fine silver, and they are lightly plated with platinum. They contain 124.41 grams of silver and are 3 1/2 inches in diameter. At today's bullion prices, this amounts to about $14 worth of silver, which is approximately what a dealer would pay someone wanting to cash in this treasure. The price, if you would like to order one of these proof quality pieces, is $99 plus $9.50 shipping. You can buy 20 for $1,698 if you are interested in an entire roll.

Proof sets are back in the spotlight. Several recent ads have featured complete runs of proof sets from the past 25 or 30 years. These advertisements make the sets seem like an attractive heirloom to pass on to the family and a good way to collect coins. They are both.

I wish the promoters success in marketing these beautiful coins. It is one way to use up the glut of proof sets that has flooded the market for many years and kept prices so low.

Collectors seem to have run out of steam and interest in saving these sets. They have been overproduced for the past 20 years, and the aftermarket can not support the prices originally charged by the government. Consequently, many old proof sets can be purchased for less than their original cost.

They are great coins, nicely packaged and fine collectors' items. There are just too many of them. These promotions are a nice way to get them off the market and into safe hands.

The single flaw in these promotions is the asking price. One set comprising 30 years' worth of coins is advertised for $500. The same thing can be had for half that amount from most coin dealers, who would be happy to move the merchandise off their counters.

I think it is a shame that nice coins like these modern proof sets go unappreciated by so many coin collectors, and yet are being snapped up by "outsiders" for double their normal value. Are we missing something here? • been rare indeed for anything of the undertype to show. Add wear and corrosion to the equation, and it is easy to understand why undertypes are so rarely seen.

There was no half-cent coinage in 1801 because no planchets were available. In the fall of 1801, however, the Mint received cent blanks from Boulton, which immediately were sent to the press. Misstruck pieces were carefully laid aside as before. By early Summer 1802, several thousand misstruck cents had been saved, awaiting official orders for their disposition.

In midsummer the engraver prepared a single 1802 obverse die for the half-cent coinage. It was not exactly a new die, having begun life dated 1800, but Chief Engraver Robert Scot punched the numeral "2" over the final "0," creating an 1802/0 overdate.

On August 2, Assistant Coiner Eckfeldt ordered the roughly 8,300 misstruck cents to the rollers, where they were flattened to the approximate thickness of a half cent. By August 7, Mint workmen had cut new planchets from the salvaged copper and struck 8,200 half cents.

The 1802/0 obverse was paired with two different reverses for the half cents of 1802. The first actually had been used for the last part of the 1800 mintage and was no longer in the best condition. Only a relatively small number of coins, perhaps 500 to 1,000 pieces, were struck before this reverse die failed. The rest of the coins were produced with a second reverse die, probably made in July or early August 1802.

Planchets for half cents often were cut from misstruck large cents.

Because the mintage from the first reverse die is small, this variety of 1802 half cent is quite rare and brings a very good price. The 51st edition of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book") estimates its value at $14,000 in Good condition and $30,000 in Fine; the reference does not price this coin in higher grades because of its extreme rarity. Despite their high price, most 1802/0 half cents with the 1800 reverse are in relatively poor condition. The majority have rough surfaces and spotty textures. Less than 20 pieces are known in all grades, but the lucky owners probably are not complaining.

Although Boudinot hoped for a shipment of half-cent planchets from Boulton, none was forthcoming in 1802 or early 1803, and there was little choice except to again lay aside misstruck cents. A small coinage was better than none.

By November 1802, another 6,300 misstruck cents had been accumulated and sent to the rollers for the same treatment as earlier pieces. It was not long before planchets were ready, and that same month, Eckfeldt delivered 6,166 half cents to the Treasurer of the Mint, Dr. Benjamin Rush. All were struck with the new reverse die, first seen in the August coinage.

During 1802, the Mint had thus coined 14,366 half cents, but it is uncertain if this was the extent of the 1802-dated coinage. By late Summer 1803, several thousand more misstruck cents had accumulated and were sent to the rollers. In August 5,900 half cents were delivered.

It is not quite clear if the half cents delivered in August 1803 were dated 1802. If they were, then the total mintage for 1802-dated half cents is 20,266 pieces. The date is so scarce that an additional mintage of 5,900 pieces is of little statistical importance.

Some researchers believe that the August 1803 delivery was dated 1802 because no overstrikes have been noted for the 1803 coinage, which definitely began in the latter part of that year with the arrival of Boulton planchets. However, as noted above, most of the overstruck pieces probably derived from lightly struck cents; the lack of an undertype is not conclusive.

If we accept the 20,266 figure—and there is no overriding reason for doubting it—then about 19,500 pieces were struck with the second reverse die, considerably more than those produced from the first reverse. The Red Book estimates the value of this second variety at a more reasonable $350 in Good and $2,200 in Fine. For Extremely Fine, a collector might pay as much as $13,000. (The 1802 half cent offered in the Eliasberg sale was a product of this second die pairing.) The condition of most 1802s of this variety is similar to those of the first variety: many are corroded and dark. Perhaps less than a dozen pieces exist above the grade of Fine.

Although more than 20,000 1802-dated half cents are estimated to have been struck, their survival rate is worse than expected because their poor appearance made them undesirable as collectibles. They may well have worn down more quickly in circulation than their better-struck sisters on the Boulton blanks.

In early November 1803, conditions at the Mint changed dramatically. On the 7th of that month, workers unloaded more than 900,000 half-cent planchets at the Philadelphia docks. The long drought was over, and until July 1811 there was a steady supply of half-cent blanks for the Mint's presses. •

Noted for his original numismatic research, R.W. Julian specializes in the early history of United States coins. His last contribution to THE NUMISMATIST, "The Half-Cent Coinage of 1825," appeared in the December 1996 issue.

The Numismatist Sweeps NLG Award Category

The Numismatist, the American Numismatic Association's official journal, took home every award in the Numismatic Literary Guild's (NLG) club publication category (Class III). The Guild's annual awards were presented during the NLG Bash at the ANA's 106th Anniversary Convention in New York City.

The November 1996 edition of The Numismatist received the NLG award for "Best Club Issue." A two-part feature by Joel Orosz and Lance Humphries, "New Research Illuminates Robert Gilmer Jr." which appeared in the November and December 1996 issues, was judged "Best Article." Past ANA president Q. David Bowers garnered the NLG's "Best Column" award for his "Coins and Collectors."

Board Considers ANA Assets and Education

At the ANA Board of Governors' first meeting in New York, during the 106th Anniversary Convention, July 30-August 3, then President Kenneth Bressett said that the Association's assets—$17.1 million—are at an all-time high, primarily because of the recent success of the ANA's investments in the stock market and increases in membership. The number of ANA members has risen about 10 percent in the last year, to nearly 29,000. The Association's convention in New York also saw the greatest number of new members recruited (326), far surpassing the previous records set in Anaheim, California, in 1995 (272) and Seattle, Washington, in 1990 (266).

In other action, the ANA Board of Governors approved:

- A numismatic curricula for free distribution to teachers of American history in elementary, junior and senior high schools.

- Funding and development of additional traveling exhibits of material from the ANA Money Museum in Colorado Springs, Colorado, for display at club meetings and coin shows.

- The sale of the Leshner House in the mining town of Victor, Colorado, originally owned by turn-of-the-century silver token producer Joseph Leshner and donated to the Association in 1981 by past ANA President Q. David Bowers.

- Publishing the ANA's budget in conjunction with the "Annual Report" appearing in The Numismatist.

- Creation of a Numismatic Education Fund committee to assist in securing support for current and future ANA programs, activities and operations, and re-affirmation of the ANA's overall development plan to encourage bequests and gifts.

- Restoring Sundays to the three-day ANA National Money Show schedule, beginning with the 1999 spring show in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida. (Over the last several years, the shows were held Thursday through Saturday. Beginning in 1999, they will be held Friday through Sunday.)

- Appointments of Donald Goebel Jr. as general chairman for the 1999

National Money Show in Ft. Lauderdale, and Kermit Wasmer as general chairman for the ANA's 108th Anniversary Convention in Chicago in 1999.

Leuver Retires as ANA Executive Director

Leuver said, "I have met some of the finest and nicest people through the hobby of numismatics—collectors as well as dealers. I have enjoyed working with and the support of ANA Presidents Steve Taylor, Ken Hallenbeck, Ed Rochette, David Ganz and Ken Bressett.

"The ANA is in a strong position today, as forged by the actions of the Board of Governors and the staff. Its finances are under control, and the ANA has an endowment of nearly $11 million, triple what it was in 1988. The ANA has a vision in its strategic plan; a robust educational program, exemplified by the Summer Conference and Numismatic Theatre; great conventions; a renowned publication, library and museum; and a growing membership base."

Leuver joined the ANA staff on April 1, 1988, after 16 years with the federal government, the last six as director of the United States Bureau of Engraving and Printing. During his tenure at the ANA, he oversaw the creation and expansion of many of the Association's programs and services. As part of his original retirement package that was included in his hiring, Leuver will serve for 10 years as a paid consultant to the Association.

ANA President Anthony Swiatek has appointed a search committee to find a new executive director. The committee is chaired by former ANA Governor Bill Fivaz, and members include immediate Past President Kenneth Bressett, ANA Convention Director Ruthann Brettell, management consultant Sam Deep, Past President Kenneth Hallenbeck, Finance Committee Chairman Charles Opitz and Treasurer Adna G. Wilde Jr. During the interim, ANA Controller Wayne Abraham is serving as acting executive director.

Members Asked to Submit Nominations for Hall of Fame

Nominations for candidates for the ANA's Numismatic Hall of Fame now are being accepted. Eligible for the biennial induction are persons, living or deceased, whose contributions to numismatics are outstanding and of the highest achievement. Any adult ANA member or club can submit up to two nominations.

Nominations should contain information about the candidate, including name, last known address, organizational affiliations and other biographical data. Most important is a comprehensive list of the candidate's contributions to and achievements in numismatics.

Hall of Fame nominations must be submitted on official nomination forms (available from the ANA awards coordinator) and received by the ANA no later than December 15, 1997. In the 1996 election, six nominees did not receive sufficient votes to be elected to the Hall of Fame, but qualified as "holdovers" and will be submitted for reconsideration in the 1998 election.

Benvenuto Appointed National Coordinator of Representative Program

Michigan collector Mark Benvenuto is the new national coordinator of the ANA Representative Program. As such, he heads the Association's information network comprised of club representatives, district delegates and regional coordinators.

Benvenuto formerly was coordinator for Region 4, covering Illinois, Indiana and Michigan. An assistant professor of chemistry at University of Detroit Mercy, he collects United States and world coinage, and enjoys World War II military currency, German inflation notes, local scrip issues and primitive money. He has written a number of articles for The Numismatist, including "That 'Other' Paper Money" published in January 1995, for which he won a first-place Catherine Sheehan Literary Award for U.S. Paper Money Studies.

Numismatic Guaranty Corporation and the Garden State Numismatic Association sponsored the event, which drew a crowd of 75 collectors and featured three distinguished speakers: J.P. Hobo nickels, and Evan Hill, who took the junior best-in-show award for "Philippine Guerrilla Currency."

In its August 1997 newsletter, "Gold Strike," California's Stanislaus County Coin Club (SCCC) reported that one of its members captured a bicycle thief. In July junior club member Rickki Brunoni was visiting a Riverbank coin shop when the shop owner saw Rickki's bicycle being stolen. The owner vaulted over the shop's counter and tossed the store keys to customer and SCCC member George Vetterly, who kept an eye on the thief's companions. The owner, an experienced distance runner, gave chase, making up for the culprit's 50-meter head start within 400 meters. After a brief struggle, the thief was subdued, and Rickki got his bicycle back.

The Maryland State Numismatic Association (MSNA) issued elongated cents (one dated 1996, and one dated 1997 with additional design elements) to promote the 1997 Atlantic Rarities Coin Exposition (ARCE), held August 15-17 at the Baltimore Convention Center. The piece features the U.S. Frigate Constellation under full sail. To the right of the ship are three dates: 1797, the year the City of Baltimore was incorporated and the original Constellation was built; 1854, when the existing Constellation was launched; and 1997. The elongates are available for 25 cents each, plus a self-addressed, stamped envelope, from MSNA, P.O. Box 6533, Sparrows Point, MD 21219. Two wooden nickels also are available for 25 cents each, plus postage.

The Westchester County Coin Club (WCCC) of New York presented its highest honor, the Ernest Weidhaas Numismatic Award, to Anthony Swiatek at the club's 63rd anniversary Dinner-Dance and Exhibit Night. The WCCC presents the award annually "to perpetuate the brilliant, unexcelled numismatic achievements of its namesake." The club meets on the third Wednesday of the month in Scarsdale, New York. For additional information, write to WCCC, P.O. Box 272, Moheghan Lake, NY 10547-0114.

H.C. JOHNSON—ANA 89371

Harold Clark (H.C.) Johnson died on August 11, 1997, in Jacksonville, Florida. He was born in Tuscumbia, Missouri, on March 20, 1920, the third of five children, and attended the University of Missouri. During World War II, he was a payroll supervisor at Curtiss-Wright Corporation.

He was interested in all aspects of money, including its history, manufacture, distribution, accumulation and management. He turned that natural interest into a career, working 43 years for various financial institutions. He pioneered Barnett Banks' entry into the consumer loan business and was that company's chief lobbyist in Tallahassee and Washington, D.C.

He is survived by Dee-Dee, his wife of almost 48 years; a son, Dr. John W. Sesney; a daughter, Ann J. Greene; and five grandchildren.

THE SOURCE FOR RARE U.S. GOLD COINS

If you are a collector, dealer, investor or marketer who has purchased rare U.S. gold coins in the past several years, chances are pretty good that at some point, we were involved in the transaction.

We offer one of the largest and most diverse inventories of 18th and 19th Century U.S. gold coins in the country. We specialize in choice, problem-free issues from the Charlotte, Dahlonega, Carson City and New Orleans Mints, and regularly wholesale to most of the leading dealers in the nation.

Together, we have over thirty years of experience in numismatics. Doug Winter has written the standard references on Charlotte, New Orleans and Carson City gold coins, while Lee Minshull has bought and sold tens of millions of dollars worth of the rarest and most important gold coins in existence.

If you would like to eliminate the middleman and go straight to the source, we encourage you to give us a call. We'll be happy to send you a copy of our latest price list. And if you're just getting started, we'll include a complimentary copy of Doug Winter's acclaimed "Connoisseur's Guide to United States Gold Coins."

Give either one of us a call today, and discover the Source for Rare United States Gold Coins!

Grading Indian Head Eagles

THE PORTRAIT OF Liberty adorned in a Native American headdress originally was designed by sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens for use on the double eagle or $20 piece, but ultimately adapted for the $10 (eagle). A couple of pattern varieties were coined in very small numbers in 1907, but the rarity of these exotic pieces precludes any discussion of grading.

For the vast majority of collectors, the Indian Head eagle series comprises two major subtypes. These include coins struck in 1907 and 1908 without the motto IN GOD WE TRUST and those issued from mid 1908 through 1933 that carry this motto. One of each subtype is typically enough to suit most collectors, as the complete series includes three issues that are quite rare and expensive: 1920-S, 1930-S and 1933.

Twentieth-century United States gold coins saw very limited circulation, and worn pieces typically received their abrasions from frequent movement between vaults or from use as pocket pieces. Indian Head eagles are rarely seen in grades below Extremely Fine, though Official A.N.A. Grading Standards for United States Coins features text and photographs illustrating this type in grades as low as Fine. Aside from a handful of dates, however, most coins of this type show little price spread in grades below Mint State (MS). For the typical type collector, an MS coin is desirable, and both the "No Motto" and "With Motto" subtypes are common in the lower MS grades.

The 1907 and 1908 issues without the motto have a soft, undefined look that an inexperienced collector might interpret as wear. These coins more accurately reflect the style implemented by Saint-Gaudens and his modeler, Henry Hering. The Mint's chief engraver, Charles Barber, deemed this softness undesirable, and the lines were sharpened on both sides when the motto IN GOD WE TRUST was applied to the coin's reverse midway through 1908.

Gold is naturally quite bright and lustrous, so the main determinant of grade when examining an Indian Head eagle is the number, location and severity of contact marks and abrasions. Since another of gold's qualities is its natural softness, even when alloyed with copper, such flaws typically are very common on gold coins. The larger and heavier the coin, the more likely it will suffer from contact with other pieces. Consequently, the Indian Head eagle seldom is found in grades higher than MS-64. Deep marks or abrasions on Liberty's face and the eagle's head are particularly undesirable and are the ones most likely to result in downgrading. Marks within the open fields also affect a coin's grade. Likewise, contact marks that obscure part of the date or mintmark can be critical, depending on how obvious they are.

Given their nature, gold coins are less likely than others to tone. When toning does occur, it generally appears as a faint, reddish tint from the copper alloy. Thicker concentrations of copper near a coin's surfaces may cause vivid red spots, which can turn black in harsh environments.

Though these red spots can often be removed with a quick dip in a mild acid bath, many collectors find such accents quite charming. It's generally best to leave gold coins as you find them, since harshly cleaned or polished examples are shunned by experienced collectors, and grading services will not certify such pieces. Coins exhibiting a few light hairlines from a gentle rubbing still are eligible for certification, but will be downgraded in proportion to the severity of the lines.

As of July 1997, Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC) had certified only 155 examples of the No Motto subtype in grades MS-65 and higher, and nearly all of these were dated 1907. For the subtype With Motto, NGC had certified 837 coins grading MS-65 or higher. Most of these are concentrated in a handful of relatively common dates: 1908, 1910, 1910-D, 1911, 1926 and 1932. All other dates in this series can be considered rare to extremely rare in gem condition. •

Although bright and lustrous, the gold in Indian Head eagles is quite soft and susceptible to contact marks.

Key Date Dollars

1889-CC, NGC, AU-55. Lightly toned specimen with bright lustre and very clean surfaces $3,750.

1892-S, NGC, AU-50. Very choice example with bright lustre and clean surfaces $1,225.

1893-O, NGC-61 Prooflike. Nice light tone over bright prooflike lustre. Scarce in PL $1,750.

1894-O, PCGS-62. A light toned gem with a very good strike $1,600.

Remove Lacquer and Stickers with Care!

REMOVAL OF FOREIGN substances from coin surfaces is an occasional, often unfortunate necessity of our hobby. Doing so carefully will preserve your coins so that future generations of collectors can enjoy them.

Q. Recently, I sent some coins that had been in my collection for more than 20 years to a grading service. Several of them were returned ungraded because of lacquer on their surfaces. I'd like to resubmit the coins for grading, as I'm beginning to sell my collection. Is it advisable to attempt to remove the lacquer?

—R.L., California

A. If you want one of the services to grade your coins, removing the lacquer is a necessity. Be aware that removal of lacquer can affect the coin's appearance, especially if it is a higher grade piece with original mint luster.

Lacquer is most easily removed with pure acetone. Place the coin and some acetone in a glass container; gently swish the solution around. To remove stubborn encrustations inside small design elements (like numerals or letters), dip a cotton swab in acetone and very gently dab (do not rub) the affected areas.

Be sure to work in a well-ventilated area and avoid breathing the acetone fumes. Finally, if you have any doubt about the suitability of this treatment for your coins, consult a numismatist or dealer experienced in this area before attempting any treatment yourself.

coins. The slabs often have dealer stickers on them. Sometimes it is difficult to remove the stickers and/or the adhesive from the plastic. How can I do this without damaging the slabs?

—R.L., New Mexico

A. Now that third-party graded and encapsulated coins have become commonplace in our hobby, more care is being taken about the appearance of the “slabs” that house some of our coins. Dealers (including myself) frequently place stickers on their slabs to show price, cost codes, inventory numbers and other information. Unfortunately, some of these stickers are difficult to remove, especially if they have been affixed for a while.

A touch of isopropyl (rubbing) alcohol applied with a cotton swab usually does the trick for me. I don't recommend other organic solvents; some may dissolve the slab's plastic, leaving its surface milky and opaque—definitely not a desired result. If all else fails, a grading service will re-encapsulate your coin in a fresh slab for a nominal fee, typically $2 to $5.

I try to minimize this problem for future purchasers by using stickers that peel off easily without leaving a residue. Some stickers are obviously better than others for this purpose, so if you are inclined to put them on your own slabs, I recommend trying some of the brands available at your local office-supply store. However, even the best adhesives become stubbornly sticky over time, so most old labels will present some challenge when the time comes to remove them.

DEADLINE

To ensure insertion in the desired issue, copy must be received by the 15th of the month (cover ads must be received by the 5th of the month), seven weeks preceding the issue's cover date. Ad copy may be changed each issue, but if new copy is not received from contract advertisers by the deadline, seven weeks preceding the issue's cover date, the previous month's ad will be repeated.

ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

Ad copy must be legible and not included in the body of a letter or other transmission. New ad copy cannot be accepted over the telephone. If an ANA member logo is used, the name and ANA number of the firm's principal officer must appear. Display classified advertisements will be placed under the classification most closely related to the ad's subject. All display classified ads appear without illustrations or logos. Requests for photography of numismatic items will be billed at prevailing national rates.

Every effort is made to ensure accuracy in all display advertising. Proofs of full-, half- and quarter-page ads will be provided for review of format and typography. At that time, ad revisions may be requested. Advertisers may be charged for extensive changes requested after deadline. The ANA is not responsible for any errors or omissions noted following the advertiser's approval of the advertisement.

Full-page ads: Advertisers should submit desired layout, photographs, artwork and logos. Design specifications will be met as closely as possible. Camera-ready material is accepted, but must be submitted as right-reading, emulsion side down (RRED) negatives and/or resin-coated paper composites with halftones and artwork affixed. Halftones should be 120-line screen. Bleeds are not permitted. Advertisements also can be submitted on 3-inch diskette or 44MB removable cartridge.

Half- and quarter-page ads: Advertisers should submit desired layout, photographs, artwork and logos for production. Design specifications will be met as closely as possible. Advertisements also can be submitted on 3-inch diskette or 44MB removable cartridge.

A 5-percent discount will be given to contract advertisers for payment made in advance. A monthly service charge of 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ percent will be applied to balances unpaid over 30 days. Payment must accompany advertisements submitted by non-contract advertisers. Advertising contracts may be suspended if account balances are 90 days past due.

BY BOB MERRILL

New York: Hot Town, Summer in the City

My stay in New York City for the ANA Convention—July 30 through August 3—lasted 12 days, but by the time it was over, I had aged 12 years. Oh, I learned a lot, among other things that money has no value in New York. It's at least $20 for anything (as in the daily tax on a hotel room). On the other hand, when I would go get a snack, I could return with a couple of bagels and a Diet Coke® and be able to honestly say, "I got all this for less than a saw-buck." I never saw a 7-Eleven® in New York, but if they exist, they probably have a sign that says: "No more than $800 is kept in our register at one time." And I'll bet the unsavory elements—those who can read—would appreciate that notice so they don't waste their time.

It is the policy of Heritage Numismatic Auctions to maximize lot viewing, so we began showing ANA auction lots on Thursday, July 24, at Shreve's Philatelic Gallery on West 57th. Most of the aggressive floor bidders spent a substantial amount of time reviewing the lots at this location or had come to our offices in Dallas earlier in the month. (I'm glad Steve Ivy doesn't read this column—given this information, he would probably want to start showing auction lots for the ANA's August 1998 sale in Portland next week!)

After four productive days at Shreve's, we moved to our viewing area at the Marriott Marquis Hotel in midtown Manhattan to show the lots for another six days. As expected, viewing was crowded. I think what I like best is meeting so many new bidders and consignors. It is always nice to be able to put a name with a face. (Of course, if your face looks like mine, that might not be so palatable.)

We divided the auction into five sessions. I was the auctioneer for the third session, which included the silver dollars. Although I've been a numismatic auctioneer for more years than a person of my age can remember, it is still a rush to sell exciting coins. Just before the session started, a floor bidder called me aside and told me he was interested in bidding on Lot 6526 at around $30,000, and would I please acknowledge him first if there were two bidders. Now, Lot 6526 just happened to be an 1875 Trade dollar in PCGS MS-68. Having the luxury of a slightly better feel for the market than this gentleman, I politely told him "yes" and promptly filed his request away for the future (such as for writing this month's column).

The lot opened at $60,000 and went to $94,000 with four floor bidders participating. At that level, the field narrowed to three until bidding went to $102,000, when only two very discreet bidders were left. Finally the coin was hammered down at $112,000. Add in the buyer's premium, and you get $125,700.

As one disconsolate bidder remarked, "You can get a 64 for 2 percent of that price, and you can't tell the difference at arm's length." Guess what? That was the same person who asked me about the coin before bidding began. Oh, well, let bygones be bygones, forgive and forget, close ranks, a clean slate, the system works, nobody's perfect, fish or cut bait, write your congressman, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, and a host of other appropriate clichés . . .

The same session featured Bill Lower's amazing Morgans. Probably the most exciting piece among a sea of wondrous coins was Bill's 1896-S dollar in ANACS MS-66 prooflike. This coin eventually sold to a collector for $65,000 plus the buyer's premium. We stopped the auction for a minute, and introduced Bill and his two sons. Bill related the tale of how he acquired the coin. Selling the Morgans was really exciting; coin after coin brought great prices.

The ANA convention in New York was magic. All ANA conventions are exciting, but the 1997 show was the largest auction in our history and arguably our finest.

No, I don't want ever again to go 21 years between ANA conventions in New York City. It is the place for the ANA convention. (Besides, no one from our auction firm got mugged.) New York is to be congratulated on what it is today—a world-class city. •

Bob Merrill has been auction director for Heritage Numismatic Auctions in Dallas, Texas, since 1976. Heritage is the official auctioneer for ANA anniversary conventions through 1999.

CURATOR'S CORNER

BY ROBERT W. HOGE

A Rare Saudi Arabian 100-Halala Piece

Few modern base-metal coinage issues truly can be considered rare. An exception is the copper-nickel 1977 (1397 H.) Saudi Arabian 100-halala piece recently donated to the ANA Museum cabinet by Lester Snell. Although it presumably was intended as a general issue by the Saudi government when it was commissioned from the British Royal Mint, only a few pieces are believed to have been struck. These apparently went into the hands of the Saudi Arabian government (the Saudi royal family?). The handsome coin, with its very full inscription, became a general issue the following year as part of the well-known international coinage program of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO).

There probably are few serious collectors of royal Saudi coins in the United States. Our oversight is regrettable, considering the preeminent economic importance of this modern kingdom. Even with its history dating back to ancient times, Saudi Arabia as a sovereign country is a very modern phenomenon.

Many will recall the epic history of the Arabs' struggle against Turkish domination during the First World War, when the incandescent British archaeologist T.E. Lawrence helped galvanize and lead the desert tribesmen against one of the world's powers. The emir of Mecca, Husain ibn 'Ali, cut the rail lines and seized the Hejaz (the province bordering the eastern shore of the Red Sea), declaring himself king (malik). 'Abd al-Aziz ibn Sa'ud, king of the neighboring inland desert territory of Nejd, conquered Hejaz in 1925 and joined it with his own kingdom in 1926. In 1932 he combined these and other smaller dependencies into the new kingdom of Saudi Arabia, his patronymic developing into the name of the country. The ibn Sa'ud family has ruled most of the Arabian peninsula ever since.

The ANA's Saudi Arabian copper-nickel pattern 100 halala dated 1397 H. (A.D. 1977) has a finely reeded edge. The specimen (ANA Museum Accession No. 1997.57.1) is well struck and in prooflike mint state.

The ANA Museum's Snell coin is accompanied by a letter from Graham P. Dyer, curator of the British Royal Mint numismatic collection, who reported that examination has confirmed that the coin was struck by the Royal Mint, there being a similar specimen in the Royal Mint collection. Although your coin is not from the same pair of dies as ours, you may be interested to hear that it shares the same reverse die as two 1398 coins in the collection here.

All I can add is that lengthy preparations were made for an issue of 100 halala pieces dated 1397 but did not proceed beyond the striking of samples.

Mechanical cleaning includes polishing with abrasives; scrubbing with a metal brush or pad; burnishing with a motor-driven wheel; or "whizzing" with a motor-driven wire brush. This simply should never be done. Such harsh treatment of a coin's surface removes the chemically protective film and also can cause irreparable physical damage.

Chemical cleaning attacks a coin's surface, often removing metal and producing an unnatural appearance. Removing patina in this fashion makes a coin vulnerable to accelerated chemical attack from the environment, or from residues of the cleaning process itself.

Only if a coin has obvious dirt deposits or chemically dangerous material on its surface (such as polyvinyl chloride from flexible, plastic coin holders) is it beneficial to carefully remove these potentially harmful contaminants. The softest brushes (for example, a natural camel-hair brush) and the simplest inert solvents are recommended for such cleaning. Care always should be taken to use materials softer than the metal for each step in removing foreign matter and drying the coin.

It is unfortunate that so many attractively toned coins are ruined by harsh mechanical or chemical cleaning. A particularly cruel twist on this observation is that the rarest coins are most vulnerable to cleaning, since many believe eye appeal is an essential part of grade and value.

To my way of thinking, original gems should remain as such and command a larger premium in the marketplace than they do. I urge collectors and dealers to develop an appreciation for attractive, chemically protective patina on original coins—and please leave it alone! •

Information for Authors

THE MISSION OF The Numismatist, the official publication of the American Numismatic Association, is to educate and provide a forum for the interchange of ideas. It serves as a refreshing review for the experienced collector and as an introduction to essential concepts for the less experienced. The staff and contributing editors of The Numismatist welcome the opportunity to review well-written, well-conceived articles displaying original, documented research.

Authors of articles published in the magazine receive $2.75 per column inch, with bonuses available to those who provide usable photographs or illustrations and/or furnish material for photographic reproduction. Incidental expenses incurred by the author in preparation of an article may be reimbursed, subject to prior approval.

Published articles also are eligible for the Heath Literary Award, which is presented annually to authors whose articles are judged outstanding contributions to The Numismatist. A silver medal and $250 is awarded for first place, a bronze medal and $100 for second place, and a bronze medal for third place. Articles displaying original and comprehensive research in U.S. numismatics are eligible for the Wayte and Olga Raymond Memorial Award, which includes a prize of $400 for first place and $200 for second. Articles about United States bank notes are considered for the Catherine Sheehan Award for U.S. Paper Money Studies, with $100 for first place and $50 for second.

MANUSCRIPTS

Manuscripts should be relevant to the study of numismatics, present new information, and/or constitute a contribution to numismatic education. The author is directly responsible for all statements made in the manuscript. The American Numismatic Association purchases first North American serial rights. Manuscripts are accepted with the understanding that they have not been submitted to or published by other publications. Manuscripts should be typed and double-spaced on 8 1/2 x 11-inch, white bond paper. Computer printouts should be letter quality. Submissions on computer disk (5- or 3 1/2-inch) are preferred, provided they are formatted in ASCII (with no carriage returns) and accompanied by a hard copy. The author's name and full street address must appear on the first page, along with day and evening telephone numbers, and, if available, fax number. Suggested article length is 4 to 12 double-spaced, typewritten pages.

Manuscripts, including illustrations (photographs, drawings, graphs, etc.), should be sent to the Editor, The Numismatist, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279. The author should retain a copy of the manuscript for reference. The Publications Department reserves the right to edit all material.

ILLUSTRATIONS

Legends or captions for illustrations should be typed on a separate sheet of paper, with a number that accurately corresponds to each illustration. Photographs, preferably high-quality, black-and-white glossy prints, should not be attached to the manuscript. The face of the photograph should not be retouched or labeled in any way. If an author lacks photographic facilities, numismatic material can be sent to The Numismatist for reproduction.

AUTHOR'S BIOGRAPHY

Authors should submit a brief biography (100 words or less) that includes pertinent information, such as place of birth, professional background, hobby interests and affiliations, and numismatic awards or accomplishments.

SOURCES

Authors are requested to cite sources used in the preparation of their articles in the manner described below:

What Are Your Coins Worth?

The Greysheet

(as the Coin Dealer Newsletter is often called) has been the standard wholesale pricing-guide of the coin industry since 1963. It is an up-to-date reporting of dealer-to-dealer Bid/Ask prices on rare coins, from the earliest through the most recent issues. For 35 years we have given our subscribers the most comprehensive and unbiased report on the entire coin market, with all the facts necessary to make informed buying and selling decisions. The CDN is published weekly to enable you to keep pace with often dramatically changing price levels. Plus, your subscription includes FREE Monthly and Quarterly supplements. All coin dealers have discovered how invaluable the "Greysheet" is.

The Bluesheet

The same independent, unbiased professionalism that has brought you the Greysheet for 35 years, brings you the ultimate price guide for the certified coin market. The Certified Coin Dealer newsletter reports the highest known Bids of actively traded PCGS, NGC, ANACS, NCI, PCI & INS coins. The CCDN brings you an intensive look at the certified coin market and the variables in price structure among the industry's leading grading services. As an extra bonus for subscribers, the "Bluesheet" now incorporates the CCDN ASKSHEET, reporting monthly on Lowest Asks or Last Trades. Now you have all the information you need to make informed buying and selling decisions.

The Greensheet

The Currency Dealer Newsletter covers dealer-to-dealer Bid/Ask prices on U.S. fractional currency, large size U.S. notes, small size U.S. notes, uncut sheets, small size currency as well as in-depth articles and analyses. This monthly publication is the only up-to-date pricing guide available in today's ever-changing Paper Money market.

"Your research is a national treasure. The book is a magnificent accomplishment, and an essential volume for any serious student of contemporary numismatics."

—DAVID L. GANZ

ANA vice-president

"Dave's latest opus has rendered most prior standards on the subject of U.S. silver dollars obsolete. Although his approach is as serious as it is comprehensive, it is nevertheless as entertaining as it is educational. A must for all collectors who call themselves 'numismatists.'"

FROM COLLECTOR TO INVESTOR

The most trusted grading service available

For many of today's numismatists coin collecting started at a young age with the discovery of a few 'old' nickles or pennies.

As we grew older the excitement of finding, trading and collecting coins stayed with us.

Eventually, the hobby became a business and the business grew into an industry.

At NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA (NGC), we are committed to advancing numismatics—both as a hobby and as a business.

THE CREDIBLE SOURCE FOR SUPERIOR, CONSISTENT COIN GRADING SERVICES.

Now dealers, collectors, and investors can be confident that they will receive consistent coin grading time after time.

The NUMISMATIC GUARANTY CORPORATION OF AMERICA, with over 500 charter and associate members, provides the industry with an independent, credible, and superior coin grading service.

Commemoratives Represent a Different Kind of Investment

FIRST, A WORD of explanation. By the time this message is published and you have had an opportunity to read it, I will have visited Washington, D.C., at the invitation of the United States Mint. By virtue of my position as president of the ANA, I have been asked to serve as a member of the James Madison/Bill of Rights Commemorative Coin Design Review Panel.

That the ANA has been invited is compliment enough, but we are being joined on the review panel by representatives from the Commission of Fine Arts, the James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation, the National Sculpture Society, the Smithsonian Institution and the U.S. Mint.

As collectors, we have helped underwrite a number of projects, most recently the restoration of public areas of the White House.

The ANA is in good company and appreciates the opportunity to serve.

At a discussion session prior to the judging, I will be expected to say something about collectors' interests in commemorative coins. Hopefully, I will be echoing the sentiments of a majority of our members, collectors who are not quite satisfied with the present state of coinage issues.

As collectors, we must realize that Congress considers its new method of funding for the various projects and programs as "painless." No public funds are being used. Through the many commemorative programs of recent years, we, as collectors, have helped underwrite the cost of restoring the Statue of Liberty, Ellis Island, the Mount Rushmore Memorial and, most recently, the public areas of the White House. We have helped pay the cost of training athletes to represent our country at the Olympics, as well as the price of sending them to the Games. On occasion, we have paid money to help reduce the National Debt and to assist in the building of the war memorial in Washington to honor Korean War Veterans. We are now being asked to help endow scholarships to "encourage new discoveries in all fields of endeavor for the benefit of mankind," as well as "encourage teaching and graduate study of the Constitution of the United States."

We will not argue the merits of the various programs nor the ingenuity of Congress in discovering a novel way to fund these endeavors. We must, however, suggest that not only the number of issues and varieties offered, but also the price tags be reviewed. Collectors' pockets can be as limited as federal budgets.

The nation may be far better served if proof issues were restricted to collector sale, and uncirculated coins, such as copper-nickel clad half-dollars, were released into circulation. Produced in sufficient quantity to encourage new collectors, the seigniorage alone may provide as much funding as is now realized from surcharges. Consider that current expenses—including advertising and promotion, packaging and handling, and administration—are deducted from the Mint's profits. Further, general-circulation commemoratives would become billboards in miniature, promoting the cause of issuance far better than is being done today.

Comes now the realization that, as numismatists, the purchase of commemorative coins cannot be looked upon solely as an investment vehicle, unless we can consider that we are investing in good causes. Commemorative coins, as now issued, have to be looked upon as something tangible given in return for support of a special cause or project. The investment potential of current commemorative coins will be best realized when they become family heirlooms cherished by future generations as evidence of a predecessor's support for a meaningful cause. •

More on Revitalizing the Hobby

"Unless people wise up and strongly support a return to a dynamic currency, there is no hope . . ."

—William Brown, Collector

MR. DOWD HAS indeed identified that which is undermining our hobby (September 1992, "Heads or Tails," p. 1197). I must say that today's circulating coins are boring, especially compared to the coins of my 1950s childhood. Nevertheless, even then some U.S. coins, such as gold coinage, Shield nickels and Seated Liberty quarters, no longer could be found in circulation. If a coin collector presented an obsolete coin to a storekeeper, said storekeeper did not pass it on to some other customer, he likely held it aside.

This example should make it clear that Mr. Dowd's proposal to place older coins in circulation is a hopeless fantasy. Retailers are sure to spot silver Roosevelt dimes and Washington quarters, not to mention Buffalo nickels. Does Mr. Dowd suppose they will pass these coins on to the general public? It is absurdly unrealistic. His statement, "Maybe some youngster will discover the odd nickel with an Indian's head on it," is nothing but wishful thinking.

Yes, sinister forces have ruined the country's circulating coinage. Unless people wise up and strongly support a return to a dynamic currency, there is no hope for the future. •

" . . . maybe the government should change one coin each year."

—Timothy J. Witucky, Collector

IDO AGREE with Mr. Dowd that it would be a good idea to place some older coins into circulation, but we need to go farther. I think all ANA members should write to their congressmen and demand that coin designs be changed.

Sportscards are very popular now because there is a lot of new material each year to collect. Our hobby, unfortunately, needs the government's help to put out new "material." Coinage designs need to change to keep people interested.

I have a radical idea: maybe the government should change one coin each year. That way each denomination would be redesigned every five years. Perhaps change the reverse at one five-year rotation and the obverse the next time around. That way we would have a different coin every 10 years.

We know the government makes money every time it mints coins and places them in circulation. If the coins were more appealing, more people might collect them; consequently, the government would have to make even more, further increasing its profits. Commemorative coins are great to collect, but they are never circulated. I'll bet a circulated Mount Rushmore coin is rarer than a proof or uncirculated specimen.

Our paper money needs a change, too. Look at the old notes—they were beautiful and redesigned often. Other nations have attractive currency that is frequently revamped. People in those countries do not seem to have a problem differentiating the various notes and denominations. •

"In my opinion, with that number of people collecting coins, the hobby does not need a boost."

—Edward C. Tyler, Collector

IDISAGREE WITH Mr. Dowd when he states that our hobby needs revitalization. In the United States alone there are tens of thousands of serious hobbyists and collectors. In my opinion, with that number of people collecting coins, the hobby does not need a boost.

In California and Texas, as well as other large states, there are scores of local coin clubs. If Mr. Dowd had attended some major coin shows prior to the current recession, I don't think he would feel the way he does. The number of coins available to collectors is limited, particularly in the area of Early American and Colonial numismatics. If we had twice the number of active collectors, the coin population in these areas, as well as others, would decrease drastically. In addition, the number of counterfeit coins on the market likely would increase. •

The opinions expressed are those of the authors and do not necessarily represent the views of the ANA or the editorial staff.

Mint Earns No Points for Treatment of Collectors

I enjoyed reading Ken Bressett's column in the June 1992 issue of The Numismatist (p. 805), especially the discussion posing the question, "Does the Government Treat Collectors Fairly?"

I, too, feel that the U.S. Mint overcharges collectors for proof and mint sets and commemoratives. To top it off, its products are boring! Who among us would not prefer the [old coinage over the current circulating coins]?

To add insult to injury, the U.S. Mint now wants collectors of commemorative half dollars to purchase coins made of "pot metal" instead of silver, as if silver is priced at $50 per ounce and therefore out of the range of the average investor.

My solution for the past couple of years has simply been to stop buying coins from the Mint, and I will continue to do so until its attitude toward the collector changes. I invite any disgruntled members to join me.

E. Pat Harkin, ANA 121042

Change in Election Procedures Could Encourage New Ideas

With all the people who joined the ANA during the last 39 years, the ANA should have at least twice as many members as it has now. I believe that one of the problems is the difficulty of unseating incumbents. I used to vote in ANA elections, but have not done so of late. It is pointless to vote in a predetermined election. Everyone knows who will be "elected" president before the election.

To be president of the ANA, one must have been on the Board of Governors. To seek that office is no easy task. Just as "literacy" tests prevented many blacks from voting in the South in the past, so the ANA's archaic election system inhibits people from running for office.

I believe that all ANA elective offices should have less stringent requirements for anyone seeking office. Perhaps a [minimum] length of ANA membership should suffice, such as three years for governor and five years for president or vice president. This would ensure that people seeking office are really interested in bettering the ANA. Perhaps some of the entrenched officeholders would be more receptive to new ideas. Too many past presidents sit on the Board of Governors.

I am not faulting any individual. They all played according to the rules, but the rules should be changed. Then perhaps the ANA will be able to hold more of its members.

Charles Bona, ANA 19532

Combine Numismatic Merchandise with Informative Displays

There's been a lot of talk about the need to attract new people, especially young collectors, to the hobby. I've never been enthusiastic about combining other, "less serious" collectibles, such as baseball cards, with coins at numismatic shows in the hope of recruiting new collectors. But if this is going to be done anyway, I have a suggestion that may make it a little more effective.

Instead of just hoping that passersby will be diverted from the baseball cards by a display of little coins, why not put more emphasis on the "neat" places that some of these coins have come from? For instance, large models of 17th-century Spanish galleons could be used along with illustrations of underwater treasure recovery operations and, of course, some of the actual coins would be on display and for sale. Such coins may be too expensive for the kids, but similar displays could be set up illustrating low-value Roman bronze coins. You might want to use some large models of Roman soldiers or other things of the period.

Of course, some coin shows separate the numismatic exhibits from the coins that are for sale, but has what I've described, with the displays related to and sitting right next to the merchandise, ever been done on a large scale for the express purpose of creating new coin collectors? Maybe it's worth thinking about.

Thomas R. Truscott

Avid Volunteers Represent California's Numismatic Interests

I read "From Your President" in the May issue of The Numismatist ("Why Is California without Representation?" p. 586) and was stunned at the perception that there is no representation of ANA members or clubs in California. Being a member of the ANA Board of Governors is not like being a United States Congressman who has the privilege of "Pork Barrel Perks" for his or her constituency. Yes, in the past there have been exceptions to this, but assuredly this is in the past.

California is not without representation. Any individual who thinks this is the case is out of touch with the Association to which they belong. A case in point is the ANA Representative Program. California is covered by a dedicated group of volunteers headed by Regional Coordinator Helen Carmody. District delegates and club representatives in California have led ANA members in the forefront of numismatic representation. It is unfortunate that the individual and club were left out of this superb opportunity. Many of my fellow regional coordinators will concur with my admiration for the operation in California.

In conclusion, the individual and club who asked the question of representation should step up and take a closer look at his/her ANA—instead of watching the bees make honey, they should join the ranks of the “worker bees” and become volunteers to better understand their loss. Don’t ask what your Association can do for you, but what YOU can do for your Association.

Gar Travis, ANA 140899

Praise for Video Grading Guide

I just had the opportunity (and pleasure) of viewing the new ANA grading video, Grading Mint-State U.S. Coins, and I was most impressed with the presentation. It was professionally produced by David Lisot and the American Numismatic Association, and narrated by ANA authenticator and former ANACS grader J.P. Martin, who does a superb job.

I was delighted to see that it addressed every area that I feel is important—in fact, crucial—to understanding today’s grading standards. The differences between “market grading” (the real world) and “technical grading” (the more theoretical approach) were covered in depth and especially well explained.

I strongly endorse this video presentation and suggest that everyone can benefit from it—beginner or seasoned collector. It is concise, with excellent illustrations, and very “user friendly.” The $39.95 price is a bargain for this 88-minute seminar, as it could easily pay for itself with just one coin purchase (or non-purchase)!

Bill Fivaz, LM 1100

To Clean or Not To Clean?

There are many experienced numismatists, including myself, who would disagree with a number of assertions in the two articles by Don Bonser in the February and March 1992 issues (“Cleaning—Don’t Do It,” p. 265, and “More about Cleaning,” p. 413). The title of the first article should have had the word “Improperly” added at the end to make it good advice.

Should the bright beauty of silver remain hidden by a layer of gray silver sulphide? Should ugly dirt be left in the lettering of a coin made of gold? Should heavily corroded bronze coins from buried hoards be left in an illegible state?

The decision to clean a coin is most frequently an aesthetic decision, but sometimes there are other factors. Proper cleaning of copper coins can help to preserve them by preventing pitting. In some cases, inscriptions and other features of a coin can be made clearer by judicious cleaning. Let me cite a notable example. Some years ago I bought (rather cheaply) an interesting gold dinar of the Kushan kingdom that was encrusted with a heavy deposit that I assumed was calcium carbonate (CaCO_4), such as that which accumulates in caves in the form of stalactites and stalagmites. I soaked the Kushan piece overnight in vinegar, the acetic acid of which was strong enough to dissolve the deposit, leaving the coin in all its splendor and rendering it completely legible.

Generally, gold coins require little cleaning. Soap and water is all that is needed to remove ugly accumulations of dirt in the lettering. Pure gold can be buried for thousands of years (and often has been) without any formation of corrosion by chemical bonding. Gold-copper alloys, however, sometimes take on a delicate, microscopically thin, light reddish-purple hue, which is generally considered highly desirable.

Silver presents a much different situation. This metal has a strong tendency to combine chemically with sulphur, the result being the formation of silver sulphide (Ag_2S), which shows up as a gray tarnish on silver coins.

Silver coins that have been in long contact with wood or sulphur-containing paper sometimes take on a golden or peacock-blue hue that is highly prized by some collectors. However, such a coloration (toning) is not natural in the sense that it would not develop during normal circulation. Nevertheless, most collectors prefer to retain such toning. (At this point, however, it is pertinent to mention an experience related by dealer James L. Halperin on page 45 of his book How to Grade U.S. Coins (1990). Mr. Halperin purchased an uncirculated 1795 dollar of the “small eagle” type for $33,500. The coin was unattractively tarnished. After dipping the dollar in “Jewel Luster,” he had no trouble selling it for $137,500.)

After long burial, silver coins sometimes take on relatively thick, hard, gray-black deposits. Disfiguring though they might be, attempts to remove them might be even more harmful.

Copper coins present still another set of problems. When unearthed after centuries of burial, copper coins often have such heavy corrosion (typically a green color) that mild organic acids (such as the acetic acid found in vinegar) or even stronger acids are required just to separate the pieces and make them legible.

Here again, aesthetic judgments come into play. Most collectors prefer to retain the green patination (verdigris) typically resulting from burial, provided it is not too thick. In the case of copper coins that have never been buried, one can hardly go wrong with soap and water.

Imperatives against any cleaning of coins have resulted from the bad reputation that cleaning coins has acquired from improper methods of cleaning that have had bad results. The question of cleaning or abstention is a complicated one to which simple rules and generalizations should not be applied.

Charles E. Weber, LM 285

Editor's note: As Dr. Weber notes, coin cleaning poses some hazards. Before attempting to clean a valuable specimen, it is wise to conduct tests on common coins.

Explanations from the Depths

I was amused by Ed Rochette's comments about the ANA motto, "Out of the Depths," in the June 1992 installment of "The Other Side of the Coin" (p. 801). I always thought "De Profundis" meant that numismatics was very deep stuff (i.e., "profound"), dating as it does to the very beginnings of recorded history.

In any event, if a motto should reflect the purposes and values of the organization, then it would seem that "Fraternity, Education and Service" would express the essence of the ANA. In Latin this translates as "Fraternitas, Educatio, Servire," but because we are a distinctly American organization, and as Latin is pretty much a "dead language," I would personally opt for the more democratic, English version.

Spencer Peck, LM 4334

Mr. Covington is correct when he says "De Profundis" means "out of" or "from the depths," as is Webster's dictionary ("a cry from the depths of misery"). But what Joseph Hooper probably meant was a common-sense interpretation of the phrase when he suggested it as the motto for the then-embryonic ANA.

Since the motto is accompanied by the "lamp of learning" and the "book of ancient history," I believe it is reasonable to assume that coin collectors are crying out from the depths because of their lack of and thirst for knowledge about their chosen hobby, which the lamp and book provide in abundance every time they are called upon through the ANA.

Whether the Association chooses to retain or replace the motto "De Profundis," nothing can ever cancel nor no one deny the excellent and learned accomplishments of the ANA.

NEW ISSUES

CANADA:

Aviation Series Continues with "Canuck" and "Gipsy Moth"

A derivative model of an aircraft first designed by U.S.-born aviator Glenn Curtiss is featured on one of two sterling silver $20 coins unveiled by the Royal Canadian Mint at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando. The new coins are the fifth and sixth issues in Canada's aviation series, "Powered Flight in Canada/The First 50 Years." One depicts the Curtiss JN-4 "Canuck" and portrays manufacturing executive Sir Frank Wilton Baillie in a 24kt-gold-covered oval cameo. The other features the de Havilland "Gipsy Moth," together with a cameo of Canadian aviator Murton A. Seymour. The coins were designed by George Velinger and John Mardon, respectively.

The first mass-produced aircraft in Canada, the Curtiss JN-4 (known as the "Canuck") is featured on the fifth of ten $20 coins in the Royal Canadian Mint's aviation series (left). The Canuck played an important role in the Canadian training program of the RFC during World War II. The sixth issue in the series depicts the de Havilland "Gipsy Moth", a light, two-seat aircraft that became the standard equipment of flying clubs around the world in the late 1920s.

Each legal-tender $20 coin sells for $46.50 (plus applicable taxes and $4 shipping and handling). Also available is a prepaid subscription to the complete 10-coin series, begun in 1990, for $460 (postpaid, plus applicable taxes). The aviation coins, encapsulated for protection, are presented in a distinctive aluminum case shaped like an airplane wing with a propeller design on the lid. To place an order, contact the Royal Canadian Mint, Box 457, Station A, Ottawa, Ontario K1N 9H3, Canada, or telephone toll free 800/267-1871, extension 599.

New Quarter Dollar Represents Nova Scotia

The rugged image of the lighthouse at Peggy's Cove represents the Province of Nova Scotia on the ninth 25-cent coin in the "Canada 125" Coin Program. Unveiled on September 9 in the provincial capital of Halifax, the quarter was designed by Bruce Wood of Truro, Nova Scotia.

The Royal Canadian Mint in Winnipeg will produce approximately 10 million of the new coins for circulation, as well as sterling proof collector versions. Twelve quarters (one released

The sterling proof Nova Scotia 25-cent coin sells for $9.95 and the bronze-plated nickel proof $1 is priced at $19.95. A complete set of 13 coins will be available later this year for $129.45. Those interested in more information should contact the Royal Canadian Mint at 800/267-1871.

MALTA:

Commemoratives Recall Awarding of George Cross

To observe the 50th anniversary of the presentation to Malta of the George Cross medal, the Central Bank of Malta authorized the British Royal Mint to strike a limited number of proof gold 25-lira and sterling 5-lira coins. The 550-piece mintage of gold proofs is sold out, but silver proofs still are available (mintage 10,000).

Malta's strategic position made it extremely vulnerable during World War II. By April 1942, Malta had borne almost 2,000 air raids, and in that month alone nearly 7,000 tons of bombs were dropped on the island. On April 15, at the height of the siege, it was announced that the "Island Fortress of Malta" had been awarded the George Cross medal for gallantry by King George VI "to honor her brave people and to bear witness to a heroism and devotion that will long be famous in history."

The common reverse of the 1992 Malta George Cross commemoratives, designed by Noel Galea Bason, depicts the George Cross medal together with the citation from King George VI. The 22kt-gold proof 25-lira coin weighs 7.98g and the sterling proof 5-lira piece weighs 28.28g. Prices are $265 and $49.50, respectively. Address orders to the British Royal Mint, P.O. Box Instituted in 1940 for outstanding gallantry by civilians as well as by service members, the George Cross was awarded to the people of Malta in 1942. This unique honor is remembered on a sterling proof 5-lira commemorative struck for Malta in 1992 by the British Royal Mint.

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA: Inventions Subject of New Coin Series

The People's Bank of China has announced a new coin series, titled "Ancient Inventions and Discoveries," comprising annual releases of five coinage designs over the next eight years. The coins will be issued in five denominations—a .900 fine silver 5 yuan (total weight 22.2g); a .999 fine gold 100 yuan (1 ounce); a .9995 fine platinum 100 yuan (1 ounce); a .999 fine silver 200 yuan (1kg); and a .999 fine gold 2,000 yuan (1kg).

The coin designs for 1992 commemorate the first maritime discoveries, and the introduction of rudder, mast and watertight compartments; the first compass, initially used for magical purposes in selecting sites for cities; the first seismograph, a cast bronze vessel used in 132 A.D.; the first kites, employed in military communications and

Republic Celebrates First Coins in 50 Years

America's Oldest and Largest Rare Coin Dealer and Leading Coin Auctioneer for Over 55 Years

Schook, Sundman and Marshall Cited as Top Recruiters

Two Member Booster Awards and a Dealer Booster Award were presented during the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida, August 12-16. The awards are given to individual and dealer members who recruit the most new ANA members in the previous fiscal year. Recognized as the ANA's top recruiters this year were Florence Schook, David Sundman and Virg Marshall III.

ANA Governor and Past President Schook, who as a member of the Association's Board of Governors normally is not eligible for this award, received a special member booster award after being cited for consistently going beyond the call of duty in recruiting members. She obtained 30 new members for the ANA this past year.

David Sundman, an ANA life member from Littleton, New Hampshire, was honored as the top member recruiter, signing up 21 new members. Virg Marshall, a coin dealer from Wymore, Nebraska, received the dealer booster award for the third consecutive year, having recruited 136 new members. As this year's winner, he received an all-expense-paid trip to Vienna, Austria, courtesy of the Austrian Mint, which sponsored the ANA's centennial membership recruiting contest.

Expressing thanks to the three winners, ANA Membership Director Kim Dixon says, "We are extremely grateful to these three top recruiters and to everyone else who has encouraged others to join the ANA's community of collectors." This year has been marked by a high rate of membership renewals, which is, according to Dixon, "a direct credit to all of our members, who demonstrate the value of belonging to this world-class organization."

Increase Your Knowledge through Exhibiting

One of the best ways to learn more about something is to explain it to someone else. Non-competitive exhibits offer that opportunity to all numismatists, whether veterans or emerging collectors. You can share your enthusiasm for your numismatic specialty, as well as increase your personal enjoyment and knowledge as you prepare your display.

Exhibit Chairman Larry Johnson urges members to plan now to exhibit at the 1993 ANA Early Spring Convention scheduled for March 11-13 at the Broadmoor Hotel in Colorado Springs, Colorado. Those planning to prepare a display must submit an exhibit application form. Non-competitive exhibit application forms are available from the ANA Convention Department, 818 North Cascade Avenue, Colorado Springs, CO 80903-3279, telephone 719/632-2646 or Fax 719/634-4085.

Exhibit applications must be completed and received by the ANA no later than January 10, 1993. Each exhibitor's efforts will be recognized with a special plaque and a complimentary ticket to the convention banquet.

Enthusiastic Students Laud Conferences and Seminars

ANA members Scott Nichols and Daniel Merriman expressed praise for

COLORADO SPRINGS Convention Update

A special reception at ANA headquarters is in the works for the 1993 Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs, March 11-13, 1993. Unique exhibits and demonstrations will highlight the festivities.

The United States Mint, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and American Bank Note Commemoratives will be on hand at the convention. Souvenir cards will be produced for the event.

The convention banquet will be held in the newly refurbished Broadmoor South Golf Clubhouse, which is situated on Cheyenne Mountain and offers a spectacular view of the city.

Heritage Numismatic Auctions of Dallas is preparing for another exciting sale at the 1993 show. Heritage also is the official auctioneer for the 102nd Anniversary Convention in Baltimore next year.

Dealers who reserve bourse space by December 1 for next summer's Baltimore show will be able to select their table location during the Colorado Springs convention. Contact the ANA Convention Department for bourse applications and further details.

A coin-grading seminar, conducted by ANA Authenticator J.P. Martin and priced at $248 per student, will be held March 8-10, just prior to the show. • the ANA's educational programs and instructors. Nichols attended the coin grading class at the 24th Annual ANA Summer Conference in Colorado Springs, Colorado, while Merriman participated in the ANA grading seminar presented in conjunction with the 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida.

Nichols states that the course instructors were a pleasure to work with. "It was especially nice to be able to grade at one's own pace and be under no pressure to buy." He mentions that in addition to touring the ANA Museum many times, "each of the evening bull sessions [was] entertaining, fascinating and educational . . . I particularly enjoyed [learning about] coin photography, errors and varieties, the S-mintmark and the 'world's worst type set.'" He felt the entire experience was worthwhile and that everyone—staff, instructors and students—seemed to have a great time.

Merriman believes that the ANA grading seminars might be the best means of protecting the collector. "While there may never be a mechanism to protect truly unsophisticated newcomers to the hobby from outright fraud, there is help available. Even with my previous experience, I was amazed that I was able to go out on the bourse floor at the convention immediately after the seminar and see things on coins that had totally escaped me before."

Although Merriman did not join the ANA until January 1992, he has been pleased with the services offered and feels that the Association is deserving of support for offering educational seminars of this type. He ends by saying that he hopes his enthusiasm for the course is contagious. "It has really added to my confidence in evaluating coins, increased my enjoyment of the hobby, and hopefully will make me some money when it comes time to sell!"

ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida.

Kay Edgerton Lenker and John Lenker were named Outstanding District Delegates for 1992. The husband-and-wife team's sincere dedication and untiring efforts are largely responsible for the success of their district in Region 8, which includes southeastern California. Separately and together, they are active in many organizations, including the California Exonomist Society, California State Numismatic Association, Numismatic Association of Southern California, Council of International Numismatics, Fontana United Numismatists, San Diego Numismatic Society, International Primitive Money Society, Redlands Coin Club, San Bernardino County Coin Club, and the San Diego County Inter-Club Numismatic Council.

Walt Southward, ANA club representative for the Big Island Coin Club (BICC) in Hilo, Hawaii, was named Outstanding Club Representative for his ceaseless devotion to the hobby. The backbone of the BICC, Southward has served in nearly every club position and as a goodwill ambassador for the club in particular and numismatics in general. A staunch ANA supporter for the last 25 years, his greatest attribute is his dependability.

Awards for top club publications are given in three categories: regional, local and specialized clubs. Selected as best regional club publications from the many outstanding entries were: first place, FUN-Topics, published by Florida United Numismatists and edited by Barbara Case; second place, the Middle Atlantic Numismatic Association's MANA Journal, edited

Smedley Award Honorees Recognized for Dedicated Service to Hobby

The late Glenn Smedley was a "collector's collector" and an integral part of the ANA for nearly 50 years, leaving an indelible mark on the hobby. To honor individuals who have given outstanding and dedicated service to the Association and the hobby, the ANA established the Glenn Smedley Memorial Award in 1988. In the spirit of its namesake, the Glenn Smedley Memorial Award was presented to ten individuals and organizations at the ANA's 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando, Florida.

Amos Press, publisher of Coin World, was honored for its 30 years of service to and support of the ANA and the hobby. Roger and Ginger Bryan, president and secretary, respectively, of Florida United Numismatists (FUN) and general chairman and assistant general chairman, respectively, of the 101st Anniversary Convention, were recognized for their tremendous support and assistance in the Orlando convention and for their leadership and participation in FUN shows.

John Gabarron, ANA sergeant-at-arms and an indispensable part of every ANA convention, was cited for his untiring volunteer efforts over the last 40 years. Charles B. "Chuck" Holstein was acknowledged for his contributions to modern, contemporary numismatics.

Schedule Club Meetings Now for 1993 ANA Shows

to member clubs and affiliated organizations that wish to meet during the Association's Early Spring Convention in Colorado Springs, Colorado, March 11-13, 1993, and the 102nd Anniversary Convention in Baltimore, Maryland, July 28-August 1, 1993. Since many clubs plan meetings in conjunction with ANA conventions, it is advisable to apply early to avoid conflicts.

Clubs that regularly meet at ANA shows will receive a meeting reservation form in the mail. For groups that conducted meetings at the Association's 1992 shows, the ANA will reserve the same day of the week, time and meeting-room size unless revision or cancellation is received.

Suspect Sought in Bank Note Theft

On June 15, 1992, an antique dealer in Butler, Pennsylvania, purchased nine pieces of paper money. Later that day, when he attempted to sell the notes to a Pittsburgh coin dealer, they were recognized as part of the collection stolen from the home of Ray Rennick of Natrona Heights, Pennsylvania, on April 23, 1992 (see August 1992, "Bank Note Theft Reported," page 1052).

The man who sold the notes to the antique dealer is 5 feet 9 inches tall, weighs approximately 165 pounds, is between 40 and 50 years old, and has light brown hair and a moustache. He is sought for possible involvement in the theft of Rennick's collection. Individuals with questions or information should contact Mike Klein at the Harrison Township Police Department, telephone 412/224-3355.

Numismatics Has Grown Slowly but Steadily

Long-time ANA member Leon Lindheim has written a column about numismatics for the Cleveland, Ohio, Plain Dealer since 1961. In a recent installment, he offered some thoughts about the growth of the hobby during the last century.

Lindheim's research showed that after the Association's first 50 years, membership totaled 3,400, increasing over the following 50 years to about 30,000. He also noted that prices for selected rare coins increased at many times the average inflation rate over the last half century.

Even though these figures do not represent all rare coins or even all collectors, he says they are a good barometer of the hobby's relative popularity and the demand for numismatic items over the years. Changes in the use of metals for coinage and industry, global and national unrest, and the sale of fabulous coin collections have impacted numismatics substantially.

Although it is unrealistic to assume that coins in general will increase in value as they have in the past, Lindheim believes that if the hobby continues to grow at its past steady pace, demand could exceed supply and prices should increase on some scarce coins—not just rare ones.

"Now," he says regretfully, "if only we could all be around in 2041 to examine the market."

50th Anniversary of U.S. Landing on Guadalcanal Commemorated

The government of the Solomon Islands issued an official decoration on August 7 to coincide with the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Marines' initial World War II landing on Guadalcanal, commencing a six-month battle that ended with an American victory and the "turning point" of the war in the Pacific.

The round, 36mm medal is suspended from a colorful, seven-striped, pinback ribbon. Struck in Australia of rhodium-plated brass, the medal requires no care to retain its lustrous, silvery surface. The obverse exhibits the crested arms of the Solomon Islands supported by a crocodile and a shark, with the motto TO LEAD IS TO SERVE. The inscription below reads SOLOMON ISLANDS. The reverse depicts an armed U.S. Marine kneeling on a map of Guadalcanal, the U.S. Marine Corps emblem above him, and the legend •50TH ANNIVERSARY GUADALCANAL LANDING•/7TH AUGUST 1992.

The decoration was presented to Solomon Islanders who survived the campaign, as well as to current members of the Solomon Islands Disciplined Forces, the police and paramilitary force, and to prominent citizens. The decoration also is available to U.S. Marine Corps veterans of World War II and their next of kin, and to U.S. Army, Navy and Coast Guard veterans who participated in the fighting on or near Guadalcanal, 1942-1943.

The price of the medal is $27.50, postpaid and insured. A miniature decoration for wear on civilian clothing, veterans' organization caps, etc., also is available, priced at $7.50 if ordered with the full-size decoration or $10 postpaid if ordered separately. A 36mm, red bronze commemorative medal can be purchased for $10 postpaid. A $2 royalty to the government of the Solomon Islands is included in the price of all decorations and medals.

To place an order, contact Christie's Pty., Ltd., P.O. Box 172, Iola, WI 54945. A specially framed decoration paired with a plate inscribed with the veteran's name is available by special order (details on request).

Spink's Reports Successful Iona Sale

The Spink-Taisei Hong Kong Coin Auction, held September 3, 1992, realized total prices of $560,000. Spink's reports that the Thai market was very strong, with everything selling above estimates.

A Mercantile Bank of India $500 bill (24 August 1948, Hong Kong) sold for $25,000, and a 19th-century Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China (Singapore) $50 specimen note brought $17,000. Two silver coins of Thailand's Rama V (1868-1910) — a 1908 1-baht "essai" and a 1909 ¼-baht "essai"—realized $28,000 and $23,000, respectively. A silver 1867 pattern tael from the Hong Kong mint fetched $13,500, while two modern Chinese pattern coins from Shensi Province—a silver dollar and a 50-cent piece—sold for $33,000.

Coin Robbery Unprecedented in Italy

The Riccione Coin Fair, held in Riccione, Italy, September 4 and 5, was the site of a massive robbery. The International Association of Professional Numismatists (IAPN) has termed the robbery "unprecedented," claiming that the "complete stocks of many coin dealers were taken, amounting to thousands of coins to the value of millions of francs."

The list of stolen material includes:

- Silver and bronze Greek coins, mostly of southern Italy and Sicily
- Gold, silver and bronze Byzantine coins of all types, predominantly 1st- and 2nd-century pieces
- Medieval coins of all types, many from the Italian city-states
- World talers, crowns and proof sets, many of high quality and value
- World gold coins, including many rarities and proof sets
- Italian coins of every type, including many rarities
- Ornamental watches and 19th-century jewelry

Collectors Should Prepare for Natural Disasters

In the wake of California forest fires and Hurricane Andrew, the Associated Press offers some precautionary advice to collectors. Some common sense and advance planning can help protect your numismatic pieces from irreparable damage.

If you purchase a safe to store your valuables, it must be "fireproof," not "fire resistant." The fires that ripped through the Oakland, California, area reached temperatures much higher than the 1,900 degrees Fahrenheit required to melt gold, and even diamonds can be destroyed at 3,300 degrees. Fireproof safes can withstand heat up to 4,000 degrees and offer protection for paper items as well as coins and jewelry. The Associated Press recommends that the safe be located in a basement, partially submerged in concrete and bolted to the floor to protect against theft by looters (a common danger if your home is severely damaged).

Should the $2,000 price tag common to such safes be out of reach, a bank safe-deposit box offers an affordable alternative. Of the 42 branches of Barnett's Bank in Dade County, Florida, nine were severely damaged by Hurricane Andrew, but safe-deposit boxes remained intact. However, since the bank is not liable for any losses to the contents of safe-deposit boxes (unless it can be proven the bank acted negligently), any losses must be claimed on individual homeowner's policies.

To receive maximum benefits from homeowner policy claims, detailed records of all valuables, including descriptions and photographs, should be kept in several different places: bank, home, and lawyer's and insurance agent's offices. It is also important to notarize records to prove when they were compiled.

Collection Spotlights Coins of European Community

The foundation and development of the European Community (EC) is one of the most significant events in modern history. Unique among international organizations, the EC is made up of 12 member states bound together by three international treaties, the most important of which is the Treaty of Rome signed by the six original members of the Community in 1957. The United Kingdom joined in 1973, as did Denmark and Ireland, followed by Greece in 1981, and Spain and Portugal in 1986.

At this historic time, with the completion of the Single Market taking effect on January 1, 1993, and growing discussion about a single EC currency, the British Royal Mint offers a collection comprising examples of the coinage of the 12 member countries of the EC. The European Community Collection includes a Belgium 5 francs, Denmark 5 kroner, France 1 franc, Germany 1 Deutsche mark, Greece 10 drachma, Ireland 1 pound, Italy 200 lire, Luxembourg 5 francs, Netherlands 1 guilder, Portugal 50 escudos, Spain 25 pesetas and United Kingdom 1 pound.

The coins, not necessarily dated 1992, are struck to circulation standards and are in uncirculated condition. The collection is priced at $34.50 (New York residents should add sales tax). Address orders and inquiries to the British Royal Mint, P.O. Box 2570, Dept. E, Woodside, NY 11377-9864, telephone 800/221-1215.

You, Too, Can Teach Numismatics!

"All you need is a fair amount of numismatic knowledge, coin savvy, and an ability to enjoy yourself with people new or inexperienced in the field to teach a class about numismatics," reports long-time collector Gregory Olin Whitney. Degrees or credentials, he says, are not required—only the desire to share your knowledge with others and a place to conduct the class. Available sites might include community colleges, park and recreation classes, community adult education centers, Boy or Girl Scout meetings, or senior citizen centers.

Whitney suggests using favorite coins as examples for discussion and odd varieties to pique the interest of newcomers. He cautions prospective teachers about appropriate security measures. "Be sensible about what you take for display. Use common coin sense!"

Through his classes, Whitney promotes the coin collecting hobby, local coin clubs and the ANA. "The best reward," he says, "is that of making new coin friends and promoting the ANA. I am in a wheelchair and still had a great time instructing this class, so no excuses about your voice not carrying far enough to reach your audience or not having enough nerve to instruct a coin class."

The British Royal Mint offers the European Community Collection, comprised of one coin from each of the member countries.

Who Owns the Treasure?

A recent judicial decision regarding the S.S. Central America, sunk in a hurricane off Cape Hatteras in 1857, awarded the ship's salvaged treasure to a group of the world's largest insurance companies. The ruling overturned a 1990 decision by U.S. District Judge Richard B. Kellam awarding full possession of the ship and its cargo to the Columbus-America Discovery Group, a team of scientific explorers who have labored for a decade to locate and recover the ship and its cargo.

The ship sank with more than three tons of gold and was pinpointed and salvaged with the aid of high-tech apparatus developed and first used by the Columbus-America Discovery Group (see "The SS Central America: Tragedy and Treasure," The Numis- matist, July 1990, p. 1064). Considered one of the greatest lost treasures in history, the discovery of the wreck precipitated claims by numerous insurance companies, universities and state governments.

In response to the recent decision, the Discovery Group requested a rehearing "in banc," which, if granted, would have the appeal of the district court decision heard by all 12 judges of the Fourth Circuit. According to a brief filed by Admiralty attorney Richard T. Robol, "In holding that the law of salvage, rather than the law of finds, governs the recovery of long-lost shipwrecks, the appeals court's opinion breaks with every other circuit court that has decided this question . . .

"The appellate panel also erred when it overturned the district court's finding that the insurance company claimants had abandoned any ownership rights they may have once held in the ship. . . . Contrary to the majority view, the district court found ample direct evidence that the insurance claimants intentionally destroyed all records of insurance and payment necessary to prove their claim of ownership."

Tommy Thompson, founder of the Columbus-America Discovery Group, noted that the implications of the case "go far beyond who owns the treasure we found and recovered, and may have a chilling effect on scientific exploration of the ocean." The Discovery Group's adjunct programs involve more than 50 scientists in studies that seek to determine whether disease-fighting factors in rare life forms have anti-cancer applications and to better understand the undersea food chain. •

In 1905 President Theodore Roosevelt asked noted sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens, to redesign our nation's coinage based on high relief designs of the ancient Greeks. Saint-Gaudens created what many consider the most beautiful and artistic coin in the history of U.S. coinage—the 1907, Roman Numerals, high relief $20.00 gold.

The coinage of the ancient Greeks that inspired Saint-Gaudens, as well as the subsequent coinage of the Roman and Byzantine empires comprise one of the most popular collecting pastimes known throughout the world.

Collecting this classical coinage is both affordable and educational. Classical Numismatic Group is in its 16th year of serving the collector in this fascinating field. If you, like Roosevelt and Saint-Gaudens, are inspired by ancient coinage, then let us introduce you to its pleasures with our fully illustrated and detailed catalogues.

The Daniel Boone Half Dollar: Blazing the Trail

by Anthony Swiatek
LM 1099

Like its namesake, this eminently collectable commemorative coinage, struck between 1934 and 1938, is synonymous with challenge and adventure.

While captaining a group of civilian soldiers during a salt mining expedition in February 1778, Daniel Boone was captured by the Shawnees. He later escaped to warn settlers of impending Indian attacks on Fort Boonesborough.

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY LIBRARY

AS KENTUCKY CELEBRATES its 200th year of statehood, it is appropriate to reflect on its founding father, Daniel Boone, and the commemorative half dollar struck in 1934 to celebrate the bicentennial of his birth.

Authorized on May 26, 1934, the Boone commemorative was limited to a total mintage of 600,000. A portion of the proceeds from the sale of the coins was earmarked to restore several Boone historical sites.

The obverse, designed by Augustus Lukeman (who took over Gutzon Borglum's work on the Stone Mountain Confederate Memorial), portrays the famous frontiersman facing left, based on the frontispiece of Collins' 1847-48 editions of History of Kentucky. The artist's rendering was accepted by the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission of Kentucky when the design was approved by the Lexington Herald, a newspaper acknowledged by William Boone Douglas, president of the Boone Family Association, to be more knowledgeable about Daniel than any other publication.

The coin's reverse depicts Boone in dress typical of the period, holding a musket in his left hand and a peace treaty in his right. He faces tomahawk-carrying Shawnee Chief Black Fish, with whom he discusses the treaty that put an end to the natives' siege of Fort Boonesborough. (In the original design, Black Fish held a peace pipe. It was suggested by Mint Director Nellie Tayloe Ross that Boone's scroll be replaced with a knife. The designer agreed, but the change never materialized because of lack of time.)

STRIKE FOR THE entire series presents no problems that influence the coin's value or grade. Inspection reveals an almost insignificant weakness of the Chief's head and hand.

PIONEER. The actual coinage date appears below the two men.

The date "1934" supposedly represents an anniversary date. I say "supposedly" because "1734," the year of Daniel Boone's birth, is omitted entirely on this issue, an unfortunate slip-up. The marks of the Denver and San Francisco Mints can be found on the reverse in the lower right field, to the right of the Chief's ankle.

Daniel Boone is depicted on both sides of this issue. Similarly, appearing on both the obverse and reverse of commemorative coinage are General Lafayette on the Lafayette dollar of 1900; the frontiersman on the 1921 Missouri centennial half dollar; and the pioneer on the 1936 half dollar issued to celebrate the centennial of Elgin, Illinois.

Public Law 258 (73rd Congress) authorized the director of the Mint to produce all 600,000 coins at one time. Unfortunately (or fortunately, depending on your viewpoint), the wording of the Act was not fully understood, for in October 1934 the Philadelphia Mint struck only 10,000 half dollars (plus another 7 for assay purposes)! The first piece was presented to President Franklin Delano Roosevelt by Senator A.W. Barkley on behalf of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission.

Should you have the pleasure of examining complete sets of this bicentennial issue, produced between 1934 and 1938, you will note that the surfaces range from deep, mirror prooflike (DMPL), semi-prooflike and chromelike, to a dull satin or an unattractive semi-matte. (The latter's grainy surface gives it a lusterless look.) A 1937-S creation exists with a DMPL surface as well as a frosty luster, while a 1936-S specimen, for the most part, displays an attractive, brilliant frost.

Strike for the entire series presents no problems that influence the coin's value or grade. Inspection reveals an almost insignificant weakness of the Chief's head and hand (which appears to be covering a split in his buckskin pants). I have, however, seen several 1936-P specimens whose reverses were struck from filled dies. In this case, foreign matter or metal filings clogged the incuse areas of the die. When the planchets were struck, a portion of Boone's right hand and the scroll were missing, a condition that affects the coin's value.

Coins grading Extremely Fine (EF) to About Uncirculated (AU) can be located with little effort. Most of the time, they exhibit some form of numismatic abuse, such as polishing, cleaning or whizzing. Issues commonly encountered include both 1935 Philadelphia creations, the 1936-P and, to a lesser degree, the 1937-P striking. Since the price spread for these dates in EF through Mint State (MS)-65 is small, it seems most logical to acquire at least an MS-64 or MS-65 specimen, funds permitting (unless, of course, all you want is a representative example in any grade).

The first Boone half dollars struck in 1935 (top) possess no 1934 "anniversary date" because the mandatory change in the date of striking caused the removal of the 1934 date from the original design. Subsequent legislation permitted the reverse of the issue to show the commemorative date "1934" in small numerals immediately above PIONEER/YEAR (bottom).

THE 1934 BOONE half dollar is not exactly an abundant issue in strict MS-64+ and MS-65 condition. The majority of the . . . supply falls into the not-so-choice category . . .

The First Boone Commemorative Coins

THE 1934 BOONE issue was sold for $1.60 through the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission, which widely distributed the issue and helped prevent its return to the Mint. Luster ranges from an appealing, bright satin (not the norm), to very bright with little contrast between the portrait and field, to take-it-or-leave-it dull. As previously noted, strike does not adversely influence the price or grade, as it would for the Arkansas, Lynchburg or Texas commemorative issues.

The 1934 Boone half dollar is not exactly an abundant issue in strict MS-64+ and MS-65 condition. The majority of the existing market supply falls into the not-so-choice category (MS-60 to MS-63) because of cleaning or polishing. Too often, as is the case throughout this issue, the "almost made it," or "raw," MS-64+ coins are offered at MS-65 prices. In many cases, these are fully original coins that were MS-65 by past standards. Unfortunately, they possess unacceptable surface demons on the coin's primary focal points, such as a ding on the obverse portrait or a hairline scratch or fair-sized bagmark on either reverse figure.

Two 1935 Issues

THE COINS THAT were struck in 1935 possess no so-called "anniversary date" because the annual change in the date of striking required by law caused the removal of the 1934 date from the original design. Before the Commission obtained special Congressional authorization (Public Law 342, 74th Congress) permitting the reverse of the issue to show the commemorative date "1934" in small numerals immediately above the words PIONEER / YEAR, 10,000 1935-dated coins were struck at Philadelphia (plus 10 for assay), 5,000 at Denver (plus 5 for assay) and 5,000 at San Francisco (plus 5 for assay).

None of the 1935 specimens were returned to the Mint, since most were again well distributed. The Philadelphia pieces, struck in March of that year, sold for $1.10 each, while the Denver and San Francisco issues, produced in May, were priced at $1.60 each.

Luster ranges from brilliant frosty (the norm) to just appealing. Nevertheless, locating top-quality sets of the 1935 issues is not easily accomplished considering the original distribution and later abuses. Like the 1934 issues, they are subject to cuts, nicks, deep scratches, slidemarks, bagmarks and abrasions.

A Boone Biography

Boone seemed to favor the rigors of field and forest over the security of home and hearth. This portrait was engraved by James B. Longacre, chief engraver of the U.S. Mint from 1844 to 1869, from a painting by Charles Harding.

UNIVERSITY OF KENTUCKY LIBRARY

THE NAME DANIEL Boone will forever be associated with the saga of the American frontier. Born and raised in Pennsylvania, Boone was the inveterate wayfarer who achieved lasting fame by guiding land-hungry settlers to the Kentucky frontier and fighting to defend them against Indian attack.

Daniel's father, Squire Boone, was an English Quaker born in Devonshire in 1696. While still a youth, Squire, his brother and sister set off for Philadelphia to appraise the possibilities of settlement for their family, which finally immigrated in 1717.

Squire settled first in Abington, then moved to Gwynedd, Pennsylvania, where he met Sarah Morgan, born in 1700 to Welsh Quakers. Married in 1720, they lived first near Gwynedd, then in Chalfont, Bucks County, before purchasing 250 acres near Reading in 1730.

Daniel was born November 2, 1734, in a log farmhouse in Berks County, the sixth of eleven children born to Squire and Sarah. Although little is known of Daniel's Pennsylvania years, he undoubtedly helped his father as a farmer, weaver and blacksmith and had the usual experiences of a boy growing up in the back country.

In 1750 Squire and Sarah joined the growing southward movement of Pennsylvanians, concluding their long trek in the Yadkin Valley of North Carolina. Daniel was then only 15½ years old, but ahead was a life filled with the rigors of the American frontier. In 1756 he married Rebecca Bryan and with her—when he was home—raised 10 children.

In 1773 he failed in his first attempt to settle Kentucky, but in 1775 he succeeded in establishing Boonesborough. Between 1775 and 1783 Daniel Boone was a leader among settlers in opening new parts of Kentucky and in resisting Indian raids. Although Boone lost two sons and a brother in the fighting, he was merciful and compassionate toward his native adversaries.

Though his legend grew, his finances languished. Beset by creditors and personal disillusionment, Boone finally left Kentucky in 1799 for Missouri, where he died near St. Louis on September 26, 1820.

DANIEL BOONE HOMESTEAD

WITH MINTAGES LIKE these, every collector and speculator wanted one or more sets; needless to say, many orders were left unfilled.

Consequently, they were overlooked by many collectors in the early '60s and '70s, when the term Brilliant Uncirculated (BU) was heavily applied. In the mid '70s, they were considered gems because of their blazing luster, but by today's strict grading standards, they are now "yesterday's gems"! Key dates are the 1935 Denver issue in MS-65 condition and the San Francisco piece in MS-64 grade. Beware of those who offer "bargains"; if the price seems too good to be true, you can bet it is.

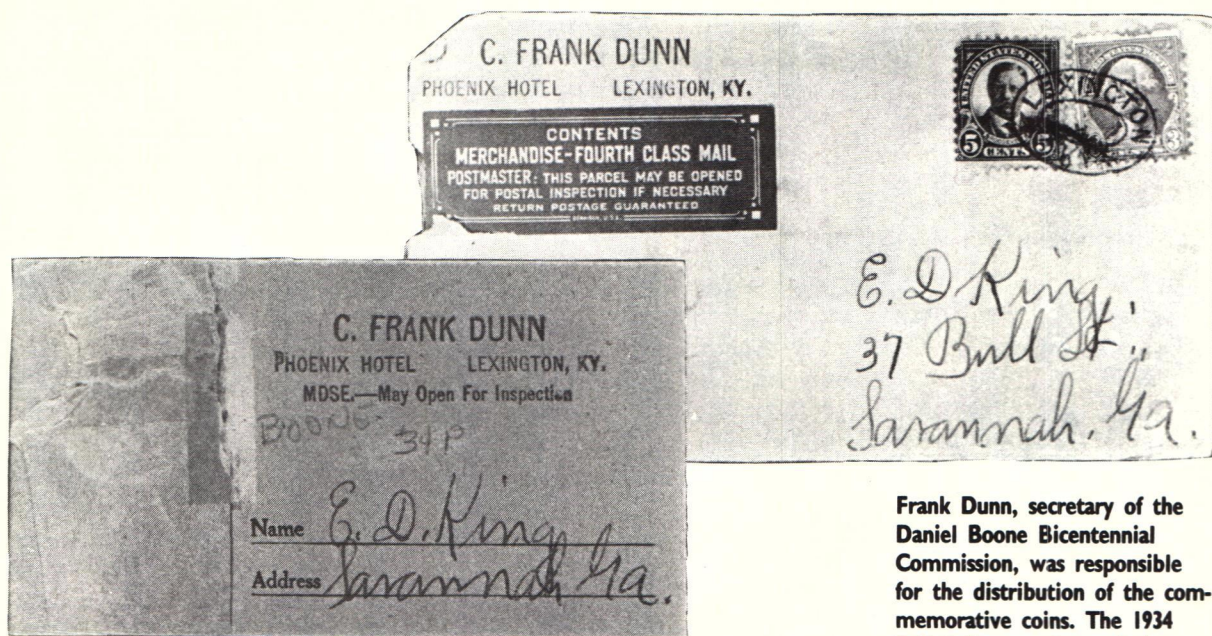

In October 1935, the Philadelphia Mint produced 10,000 coins (plus 8 assay specimens) with the added "small date" 1934 above PIONEER/YEAR. However, the following month the branch mints struck what amounted to the lowest mintage ever created. Denver made 2,000 (plus 3 assay pieces), while the San Francisco Mint produced 2,000 (plus 4 assay pieces).

Not a single coin of this issue was returned to the Mint. The D- and S-mintmark specimens were paired for $3.70, while the remaining Philadelphia issues originally were offered for $1.10 each. With mintages like these, every collector and speculator wanted one or more sets; needless to say, many orders were left unfilled. The Commission was heavily criticized by those who could not purchase the very rare, small-date issue. Congressional hearings resulted and brought to light the abuses of commemorative coin programs. (Afterward, larger mintages were authorized; the number of pieces that could be sold to one customer was fixed; and each new issue was produced at only one minting facility.)

Eye-appealing, brilliant, frosty luster is the norm for the Philadelphia creation. Some pieces flaunt that "I don't want her, you can have her," semi-brilliant surface. However, because of lack of time and knowledge, no attempt was made to alter the surfaces of the dies forwarded to the branch mints. (They were, shall we say, used as received.) The dies were not prepared in the same manner as the Philadelphia dies; the rare "D" and "S" issues of '35 display a dull, mattelike finish, especially on the obverse.

An examination of the obverses of the Denver and San Francisco coins sometimes reveals die polish marks in the field. For whatever reason, the reverses of both issues were polished during a halt in production, occasionally creating a chromelike appearance. In this case, no contrast between the design and field can be seen. (Just picture a Franklin proof half dollar with no contrast!) The Denver Mint coin displays this condition, but to a lesser extent and frequency.

Unknowledgeable hobbyists associated brightness with newness or original condition, and, as a result, efforts were made to "improve" the coins by dipping and other forms of cleaning. When sets of Boone commemoratives with Frank Dunn, secretary of the Daniel Boone Bicentennial Commission, was responsible for the distribution of the commemorative coins. The 1934 half dollar was forwarded to subscribers in a Dennison 50-cent coin mailer. Later, specimens were mailed in a "wedge pocket" coin holder, manufactured by the Lindly Box Company of Marion, Indiana. When the supply of holders was temporarily exhausted, individual pieces, as well as sets, were placed in tissue paper or between thin cardboard, inserted into an envelope and shipped.

unnatural surfaces were purchased for their actual worth, several events usually transpired: 1) they were sold for their actual value by honest dealers; 2) they were sold by the same to the unscrupulous, who artificially toned the pieces to hide the cleaned surfaces; or 3) they were sold as gem sets at super bargain prices. (How good was the deal? Try one-half the going rate, or 10 to 20 percent below bid MS-65 prices, depending on market conditions.)

A "rare date set" of these commemorative half dollars must include the "small date" 1934 above the words PIONEER/YEAR. I have seen the 1935 set—without the small date—substituted for the rare date variety in complete commemorative sets. The higher mintage Philadelphia issue is not rare and should sell at type-coin prices. For example, if an MS-65 set were to sell for $2,500 because of the low-mintage "D" and "S" issues, the Philadelphia strike should be valued at $500. Should the coin be especially appealing, it may be worth more money.

The 1936 Coins

IN TOTAL, THE Philadelphia Mint produced 12,000 1936-dated commemoratives (plus 12 for assay), the Denver Mint struck 5,000 (plus 5 for assay), and San Francisco made 5,000 (plus 6 for assay). Needless to say, the rarer pieces are not abundant. In MS-64 condition, they are hard to locate; in MS-65 and loftier ratings, the San Francisco specimen is rarer.

This set of Daniel Boone commemorative half dollars flaunts luster that ranges from brilliant frosty (for the majority of the issue) to dull frosty (as seen on some Philadelphia products). Using current grading standards, it is somewhat difficult to locate or assemble an eye-appealing set. It's becoming even more difficult to do so for the higher grades. As previously noted, you should attempt to acquire those "D" and "S" specimens, the rarer strikes in MS-64 and MS-65 condition. Pass up the not-so-nice coins, unless the price is very right.

After examining the 1978 Mint report, you might be led to believe that 4,900 Denver and 4,900 San Francisco specimens of the 1936 issue were returned for remelting! (By simple subtraction, you will find that only 100 pieces of each issue would currently exist.) Such is not the case, so consider the report in error!

It is thought that four 1937 Boone matte proof sets were made for Chief Engraver John R. Sinnock. Each coin possesses a double strike with sharp, squared letters.

Overproduction in 1937

IN JANUARY 1937 the Philadelphia Mint produced 15,010 specimens (with 10 for assay), later offered at $1.60 each. Their luster ranges from deep, mirror prooflike to semi-prooflike, brilliant frosty (not the norm, though similar in appearance to the 1935 "no small date" specimens, the 1935-P with the small date, and the 1936 creations). Where are these beautiful DMPL and prooflike coins hiding? It could be that many of those produced were bagged with a group returned for remelting, while others reside in private collections. (The same logic could apply to the 1937-D and -S and 1938 issues.)

Five months later, the Denver Mint produced 7,506 specimens (including 6 for assay). The Denver and Philadelphia issues were sold as a pair for $7.25 (the Denver specimens were not sold individually). The San Francisco Mint produced 5,006 specimens (including 6 for assay) in October 1937, which sold individually for $5.15. Three-coin sets, featuring a coin from each mint, were available for $12.40.

The surfaces of the 1937-D and -S surfaces range from DMPL and semi-prooflike to brilliant or dull frosty. Die polish marks or raised surface lines resembling fine scratches are evident in varying degrees.

Since the commemorative boom was by then on the decline, thousands of coins were returned to the Mint and melted, leaving some rare issues. Of the 15,010 Philadelphia specimens, 5,200 were melted; as for the Denver and San Francisco coins, 5,000 and 2,500, respectively, were sent to the melting pot. Fifty presentation pieces supposedly were struck from highly polished dies at the San Francisco Mint.

With only 2,500 potential sets dated 1937, consider acquisition of sets and individual "D" and "S" specimens graded MS-64 or higher, when and if you can locate them. Note that it is the Denver and San Francisco pieces that make this set rare, not the more common Philadelphia issue, which should sell at type-coin prices. The San Francisco coin is the rarest of the three.

Possibly four 1937 Boone matte proof sets were made for Chief Engraver John R. Sinnock. The branch mint specimens were struck in Philadelphia before the dies were shipped to those facilities. Each coin possesses a double strike with sharp, squared letters and a matte surface. A complete set has sold for as much as $55,100! Anyone can attempt to duplicate the grayish finish

The Final Year

THE DANIEL BOONE Bicentennial Commission stated that "the Boone issue will end with the '37 set," but went ahead and obtained 5,000 sets dated 1938 anyway. The Mints each produced 5,000 coins, with Philadelphia and Denver striking 5 each for assay, and San Francisco producing 6.

Luster for the 1938 coins varies from DMPL (certainly not the norm) to prooflike, down to dull satin. Lack of sales destined 2,900 coins from each Mint to the melting pot, leaving only 2,100 sets available for collectors and investors. Again, the San Francisco half dollar is the rarest in grades MS-64 and MS-65; however, the other two coins can be equally hard to find.

As a series, the Daniel Boone commemorative half dollar is underrated. The coins are likely to have an excellent future, especially in higher mint-state grades. •

Panama's Puzzling Phone Tokens

LATIN AMERICAN
NUMISMATICS

An understanding of the coinage and economy of Panama in the early 1900s helps unravel the mystery of a series of unusual telephone tokens.

THE TELEPHONE TOKENS of Panama issued in the early 20th century in denominations of 10 and 20 cents are oddly marked and inconsistent with the regular coinage of that country. All are marked "SILVER," although clearly they are not made of silver. The 10-cent token initially seems to correspond to the $\frac{1}{10}$ -balboa ("un decimo de Balboa") coin of Panama, first issued in 1930. However, the companion 20-cent token apparently has no counterpart in Panamanian currency: no legal-tender coins are denominated "20 cents."

Since a country's tokens usually are related in some way to its circulating coinage, how can Panama's telephone tokens be explained? By fitting together bits and pieces of history, we can come up with a coherent and logical explanation.

On November 3, 1903, when Panama declared its independence from Colombia, the most common coin in circulation was the Colombia silver 50 centavos (half peso), which could be exchanged at the rate of 2 pesos, 30 centavos Colombian to one U.S. dollar. In setting up the new coinage of Panama, it was decided that the new "balboa" would be on a par with the U.S. dollar, making it easier for the workers on the Panama Canal (on which construction was getting under way) to exchange their wages. It also was decided that the silver coins of Panama would be 90-percent silver and 10-percent copper, and that the balboa would be divisible by 100, just like U.S. coinage.

Unfortunately, no provision was made at the time for making the coins of Panama equal in physical size to U.S. coinage. The gold balboa, not yet minted, was to equal the value of a U.S. gold dollar. However, the U.S. ratio of silver to gold was 16:1; Panama had a 32:1 ratio. This meant that the silver coins of Panama contained twice as much silver as contemporary U.S. coins of the same denomination. For example, the $\frac{1}{4}$ -balboa

The Panama Telephone Company issued a 20-cent token (top) to correspond with the country's 10 centesimos (bottom). The token's designation as CENTS/20/SILVER seems to explain that it was equal in value to its .900 fine silver counterpart.

... THE PRESENCE OF the legend "SILVER" seems to explain that the token is to be used in place of the silver coin of the peso value indicated.

The Panama 5-centesimo coin (top) was replaced by 10-cent tokens for use in pay telephones. The Panama Telephone Company produced two varieties (center), one with slightly larger obverse lettering. The Panama Power & Light Company issued a token as well (bottom).

coin was double the weight of a U.S. quarter dollar, although both were 90-percent silver, 10-percent copper. As a result, this coin of Panama was about 31mm in diameter, while the equivalent U.S. quarter was only 24mm in diameter.

Panama's first monetary law made no provision for paper currency; consequently, since 1904, the paper currency of the United States has circulated freely throughout the Republic of Panama and the Panama Canal Zone. The paper money posed no problem, but the large silver coins proved troublesome until the Republic of Panama released smaller silver issues in 1930-31.

The 50 centesimos of Panama, struck in Philadelphia in 1904 and 1905 from the same 90-percent silver alloy as U.S. silver coins, weighs 25 grams and measures 36mm in diameter. Compare this to the United States' silver Morgan and Peace dollars, weighing 26.73 grams and having a diameter of 38mm. The 50-centesimo coin of Panama was almost as big as our silver dollar! Typical of coins of that size in Latin America, the 50 centesimos was promptly dubbed a "peso," like the Colombian peso before it.

If the 50-centesimo coin was a "peso," then the 10 centesimos, also struck in Philadelphia in 1904, was one-fifth of a peso. Here lies the explanation of the telephone token that reads "20 cents silver." Expressed as a decimal, the 10 centesimos is $^{20}/_{100}$ of a peso or "20 cents." This coin was one of the pieces to be replaced by a token for telephone use.

The 20-cent phone token is the same size (24mm) as Panama's 10-centesimo coin. Likewise, the 10-cent token is the same size (18mm) as the 5 centesimos (one-tenth peso) struck in Philadelphia in 1904 and 1916 of 90-percent silver, 10-percent copper. In both cases, the presence of the legend "SILVER" seems to explain that the token is to be used in place of the silver coin of the peso value indicated.

Recently, I have found evidence of a 50-cent telephone token of Panama, a denomination not previously cataloged in any known reference (photographs are still being sought). Similar in design to the 10- and 20-cent telephone tokens, it is the same size (31mm) as the 25 centesimos (one-half peso) and was struck in 90-percent silver, 10-percent copper by the Philadelphia Mint in 1904, although its mintage apparently was very limited.

However, the question remains why—and when—these telephone tokens were issued. As mentioned, the amount of silver in the early coins of Panama was high. Toward the end of World War I, the price of silver

An Idea Whose Time Has Not Yet Come

Recent debates in Congress have created a legacy of proposals for coinage redesign.

by David L. Ganz
LM 1072

In 1985 Diane Wolf was appointed by President Reagan to the Commission of Fine Arts, an advisory panel established in 1910.

THE DESIGN OF our nation's coinage has been surrounded by controversy ever since the first Congress spent the spring of 1791 debating what should appear on the first monies of the new American nation. While modern numismatists have always been concerned about the design of our nation's coinage, in recent days the controversial aspects of coin design have been re-ignited, spilling over into the daily press as Congress debates the merits of a changeover, first on the obverse and reverse of all denominations, and later on the reverse of selected coins.

The current round of coinage redesign proposals was introduced in the House of Representatives as H.R. 3314 on September 21, 1987, by Congressman Charles Rangel (D-New York) and several other members of the U.S. Congress some six months after the American Numismatic Association Board of Governors (and later the U.S. Commission of Fine Arts) passed resolutions supporting design changes.

The ANA, one of the oldest educational, nonprofit organizations of coin collectors in the world, and the only one chartered by Congress, has played an unusual role in the process of coinage redesign. Since a resolution of the Board of Governors was made in February 1987 in Charlotte, North Carolina, the ANA has been intimately involved in contemporary coinage redesign legislation. Initiated by Kurt Krueger, then an ANA governor, the resolution was modified by the ANA Board and eventually was passed unanimously after some discussion about the merits of the ANA's entrance into the political arena.

But if there is a driving force behind coinage redesign, it is not the ANA. Rather, it is one individual, whose involvement illustrates that a single person can make a difference. In this case, the difference has meant extended

SHORTLY AFTER BEING appointed to the Commission, Wolf found a cause in coinage redesign. The rationale: she found contemporary coinage designs boring . . .

WHEREAS, coin designs are a reflection of the vitality and creativity of a nation, and;

WHEREAS, present U.S. coins show a nation frozen in time with designs of previous eras, and;

WHEREAS, this design inertia has caused many collectors of U.S. coins to lose interest in current issues, and;

WHEREAS, by 1989 the design of all five circulating coin denominations will have fulfilled the 25-year statutory minimum use requirement;

NOW THEREFORE the American Numismatic Association Board of Governors does recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury James A. Baker III and to Rep. Frank Annunzio, chairman of the House Consumer Affairs and Coinage Subcommittee, that all designs on the five circulating denominations, cent through half dollar, be changed to reflect the ideals and aspirations of America as the nation nears the 21st century.

Following a motion by ANA Governor Kurt R. Krueger, the American Numismatic Association passed a resolution in February 1987 supporting changes in the designs of our circulating coinage.

consideration of the coinage redesign proposal by both the House and the Senate; it also may have spelled the defeat of the proposal in 1992 and for years beyond.

Bearing the distinction of both proponent and albatross is Diane Wolf, now an Upper East Side New Yorker, whose father, George, is a Dallas businessman and Republican fund-raiser. In 1985 she was appointed by President Reagan to the Commission of Fine Arts, an advisory panel established in 1910 that has been involved not only in coinage matters, but also in all matters affecting beautification and design, ranging from plantings on the George Washington Parkway en route to National Airport in suburban Arlington, Virginia, to architecture in the greater Washington, D.C., area.

Shortly after being appointed to the Commission (whose members are compensated only for reasonable expenses incurred in meeting several times each year), Wolf found a cause in coinage redesign. The rationale: she found contemporary coinage designs boring and stultified, not surprising since the portraiture on most of our circulating coinage averages 60 years of age.

The designs on today's coinage undoubtedly were arresting when they first were issued for circulation. Vermeule says as much in his classic book, Alan Cranston was successful in convincing the Senate to pass the coinage redesign legislation a total of 13 times.

COIN WORLD PHOTOGRAPH BY RICHARD E. FEENEY

THE PROBLEM WITH the portraits on the cent, nickel, dime and quarter is that they have outlived their time, lasting longer than any other coin designs . . .

Actual Size: 21.21mm

Felix Schlag's rendering of Thomas Jefferson on the 5-cent piece is a classical translation of a bust of the President by Houdon.

Numismatic Art in America (1971). Victor David Brenner was a pre-eminent sculptor at the time his Lincoln cent was issued in 1909, as was Augustus Saint-Gaudens, who designed the $20 gold piece (a version of which is still in use 85 years later on the American Eagle gold bullion coin).

Felix Schlag's version of Thomas Jefferson on our 5-cent piece is a classical translation of the famed Houdon bust executed in Jefferson's lifetime, as is John Flanagan's portrait of Washington after Houdon's comparable depiction. Schlag's original reverse design was exquisite, picturing Monticello in a three-quarter view, similar to that of Gettysburg on the 1990 Ike commemorative dollar. The Treasury changed his rendering of Monticello to a front view that not even the critics of redesign can call attractive.

Monticello, Jefferson's pride that he himself designed, resembles a mausoleum. The final version is so one-dimensional as to be virtually unrecognizable; hence, the name of the building was added beneath it.

Though Sinnock took the credit as chief engraver for the portrait of Franklin Delano Roosevelt on the dime, the real work was done by his assistant (and later chief engraver) Gilroy Roberts. The design is after the important work by Selma Burke, an artist now in her 90s. In the nearly 50 years that have passed since FDR's death, the world—and his patrician view of it—has changed. In his 1971 classic, Vermeule characterized the nickel, dime and quarter as "perhaps passable as a document of official art" whose continued use is "longer than its quality merits."

The problem with the portraits on the cent, nickel, dime and quarter (the only true circulating coins) is that they have outlived their time, lasting longer than any other coin designs ever employed by the United States. (Even the long-lived Seated Liberty design was in vogue only from 1837 to 1891, a span of 54 years, which all but the dime have already exceeded.)

None of this is intended to attack the integrity or even the continued use of the portraits of Lincoln, Jefferson, Roosevelt and Washington. But more modern sculpture—even of the same individuals—would better represent America as a technological society with an artistic soul.

And there are other problems with the existing portraiture. Stephen Taylor, president of the ANA in 1987-88, explained the situation to a Congressional subcommittee studying the issue.¹ He cited an example in which he, ANA Executive Director Bob Leuver and I were having lunch with three members of the local committee for the ANA's 1989 convention in Pittsburgh.

¹ Hearing on Legislation to Change the Designs of United States Coinage (H.R. 3314) before the Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage of the House Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, Serial No. 100-90, 100th Congress, 2nd sess. (1988).

A REPUBLICAN TREASURY chief couldn't very well order Roosevelt off the dime and keep Lincoln on the cent . . . without offending Congressional sensibilities . . .

During our conversation, a member of our group informally inquired as to who was depicted on the nickel, the dime and the quarter. The answers were startling—Lyndon Johnson was on the dime and Washington's portrait appeared on the nickel! Taylor's anecdote illuminates the need for a change in coinage design.

In late 1986, Diane Wolf began to vocalize her concern about the nation's coin designs, and in January 1987 writer Paul Green published an extended interview with her in which she strongly advocated across-the-board change. Not long after, the ANA Board met in Charlotte, and Governor Krueger's amended resolution was adopted.

At a meeting on April 16, 1987, the Commission of Fine Arts adopted unanimously a resolution prepared by Wolf:

In view of the historic frequency with which United States coins have been changed, the Commission of Fine Arts recommends to the United States Congress and the Secretary of the Treasury that they consider a timely way of changing the obverse and reverse of the cent, nickel, dime, quarter and half dollar by invited compensated competition.

Until September 1987, Wolf worked tirelessly on behalf of her proposal. The Rangel legislation marked the start of a process that ultimately would take more than five years, and in the end, the success—and failure—of the proposal could be credited to its principal proponent.

Legislation is a slow, time-consuming process, particularly when, as here, the Secretary of the Treasury already possessed discretionary authority to change the design of any coin whose design has been in use for 25 or more years. The question is why didn't the Administration endorse design changes for the qualifying coins? (Only the Kennedy half dollar design had not run its allotted 25-year minimum mandated by the Act of September 26, 1890.)

The answer is politics,² which crept into the coinage redesign process again and again. A Republican Treasury chief couldn't very well order Roosevelt (a Democrat) off the dime and keep Lincoln (a Republican) on the cent or, for that matter, change any other design without offending Congressional sensibilities, or so the perception was in 1987.

Meanwhile, a groundswell of support emerged, at least in the hobby press. By September of 1987, Coin World Editor Beth Deisher was able to present to U.S. Treasurer Katherine Ortega a petition signed by 12,000 readers who favored coinage redesign. David Harper, editor of Numismatic News, provided statisticians with information about potential sei-

Representative Frank Annunzio, chair of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, advised that he would oppose coinage redesign, but would offer his support of the five proposed commemorative coin programs.

gniorage from a prospective design change, paving the way for Congressional action.

Hearings before the Senate Banking Committee finally were scheduled for late April 1988. Senator William Proxmire (D-Wisconsin) chaired the committee and subsequently authorized the hearing that itself was chaired by Senator Alan Cranston (D-California).

Four days before the hearing, Representative Frank Annunzio (D-Illinois), chair of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage, let loose a powerful barrage against Wolf and her proposal in a five-minute speech on the House floor. "We should reject attempts to respond to the siren's song of easy revenue through coin design changes, because there are no profits to be made,"³ he declared, firing a warning shot across the bow of coinage redesign proponents. It was representative of things to come.

Cranston began the Senate hearing on April 22, 1988, by extending "special praise to the perseverance of Diane Wolf, Commissioner of Fine Arts, through whose tireless advocacy S. 1776 now is co-sponsored by a majority of U.S. Senators." Senator William Armstrong (R-Colorado), in his prepared remarks to the Committee, revealed that a total of 61 members of the Senate had signed on as co-sponsors of the legislation, a sure sign of support and ultimate victory.

Mint Director Donna Pope was invited to testify and noted that "the Treasury finds generally nothing objectionable to this legislation," adding that the government expected to make $224 million "in additional seigniorage receipts [that] will be generated in the first 6 years of new designs and $18 million in additional numismatic profits." She commended Wolf's efforts and success "in aligning the coalition necessary to bring serious consideration to this matter."

Representative Jimmy Hayes (D-Louisiana), an ANA member, also testified at the Senate hearing. A knowledgeable, long-time coin collector in his own right, he had appeared before the same Senate banking unit two years earlier when he was the appointed Commissioner of Financial Institutions for the State of Louisiana.

"NOT ONLY DO our coins tell people in faraway lands something about us and our heroes, ideals, dreams and celebrations, [but] they also speak to the ages."

Hayes related that "not everyone will either love or hate the new designs," but went on to ask for "no more than government support to continue 200 years of recorded cultural evolution" by modernizing American coinage design.

Wolf used the hearing as an opportunity to explain that she was not a collector herself, nor did she intend to "make any portion of [her] living from the buying and selling of coins." Instead, she aimed to revitalize what she termed "our Nation's calling cards. They travel the globe. Countless millions who have no contact whatsoever with the United States and our people know our coins. Not only do our coins tell people in faraway lands something about us and our heroes, ideals, dreams and celebrations, [but] they also speak to the ages."

She noted 33 major coin changes that had taken place in the preceding two centuries and explained that "our coins should celebrate the reasons our country is so special: liberty, justice, freedom and democracy. These ideals should be depicted through renderings by our best artists."

Wolf's remarks paralleled those of the numismatic world. Margo Russell, then editor of Coin World, editorialized on December 28, 1977, that "Father Time has indeed caught up with [the U.S. coinage system], especially when it comes to design changes . . . As much as we like Ike, respect and admire Abraham Lincoln, Thomas Jefferson, revere the father of our country beyond measure, honor Franklin D. Roosevelt, and mourn after John F. Kennedy . . . it's time for a change—not for change's sake, but for the sake of our history.”

Esteban Torres (seated, second from right) was appointed chair of the conference committee. The debate was animated; ultimately, both Chalmers Wylie and Al McCandless (seated, right), refused to sign the committee report and agree to the recommendations.

Elvira Clain-Stefanelli, executive director of the National Numismatic Collections at the Smithsonian Institution, put it to the committee eloquently: “It is my personal conviction that our coinage could only gain if it were to express our notions of liberty, progress, freedom, [and] democracy in a way that could find an echo in the hearts of our own generation.” She spoke out for design change, calling it a “conditional change which should be done only with the unique scope of an improvement, not a change for the sake of change.”

The hearings were used as a springboard to attract Congressional attention to the legislative proposal, especially after representatives and senators had been approached by the tireless Diane Wolf, who trumpeted coinage redesign as if it were a holy grail.

But Annunzio was hardly amused, and on April 29, 1988, he again took to the floor of the House, warning that “we should not be led off course by the siren's song, lest we founder on the rocks of hidden costs,”⁴ a statement that infuriated Wolf. In a well-documented article covering the emerging controversy, Washington Post reporter Bill McAllister quoted her response: “I don't appreciate being called the siren . . . That's a pretty low comment.”

She then went on to state that “my biggest opponent is not Mr. Annunzio . . .,” but rather Curtis Prins, staff director of the coinage subcommittee. “He's a bully. Let him pick on someone his own size,”⁵ she said, to which Prins responded, “People have called me worse than a bully . . . This bill is going to have to stand on its merits and not the Alice-in-Wonderland approach of Diane Wolf.”

By September 1988, over 190 members of the House of Representatives—nearly a majority of the 435 members—had co-sponsored Rangel's bill, but there wasn't a flicker of interest in passage because of Annunzio, who chaired both the coinage subcommittee and the powerful House Administration committee.

“I am completely opposed to this legislation and would ordinarily not have held a hearing on it,” he said on September 14, 1988, as he called an early-morning hearing to order in the marble-halled Rayburn House Office Building.

Attending again was Donna Pope, Mint director, who still spoke cautiously in favor of the proposal; Representative Jimmy Hayes, another proponent; David Harper, no longer with Numismatics News, who had in his capacity as editor conducted a poll justifying the change;⁶ and Bob Leuver, representing the American Numismatic Association, whose board approved the design change proposal that started the ball rolling.

The highlight was an interchange between Wolf and Prins, who as subcommittee staff director was permitted to examine Wolf as a witness. She began her testimony before the subcommittee in a less than conciliatory tone, relying on the sheer numbers of her supporters to cow Annunzio into submission. Her statement was, in fact, an ad hominem attack on the chairman, and though the printed version of the hearings sanitizes her anger and the verbal brickbats (as is customary in Congressional reporting), significant portions survive to impart the enmity that existed between the two parties.

"To respond to Mr. Annunzio's very unfair and totally irrational letter," she began, only to be cut off by Prins, who warned her that "we are not here to berate the chairman of this subcommittee."

Annunzio then chimed in, "I hold you directly responsible for any of the conditions and misunderstandings that are taking place. You knew when the resolution passed the Fine Arts Commission . . ."

The bitter discourse subsided only because the chair of the parent House Banking Committee, Representative Henry Gonzalez (D-Texas), interjected to bring the acrimony to a close.⁷

Normally, the subcommittee members vote after the hearings and pass the matter along to the House Banking Committee. The committee then debates the issue and, if it approves, asks the House Rules Committee for a rule (i.e., the terms and conditions of the debate) to bring it to the floor for a vote.

Here, the battle lines were drawn. Even though a majority of the House of Representatives had co-sponsored the legislation (virtually assuring passage if the matter ever came up for a vote), Annunzio relied on the rules of the House to prevent the bill from even being reported out of the coinage subcommittee.

In the meantime, Wolf plugged away, cajoling members of the House and Senate alike, always able to find a legislative champion. In the Senate, Cranston assumed a leadership role and was successful in convincing the Senate to pass the legislation a total of 13 times.

Once, the bill passed the Senate by unanimous consent. In another instance, 96 members voted in favor, with none voting against. Other passages came as riders to various Senate bills, which were not considered germane by the House.

In January 1989, Annunzio left the coinage subcommittee post, and Representative Richard Lehman (D-California), a junior member of the subcommittee, became chair. He was no more friendly than the prior chairman, probably because Annunzio, as chair of a House Administration subcommittee, could allocate parking spaces, telephones and even sta-

Congress did not accept the coin redesign proposal, although a number of commemoratives were approved, among them pieces honoring the Columbus quinquennial and the White House bicentennial.

In October 1990, Cranston attached the redesign proposal to a bill to rename a post office in Cleveland for the late Jesse Owens, the Olympic athlete. Like earlier attempts, in which it was attached to a major housing bill and a money-laundering regulation, it passed the Senate.

But this time, the Treasury apparently started reading the tea leaves and did a stunning about-face. John E. Robson, deputy secretary of the Treasury, wrote to House Speaker Thomas S. Foley on October 24 expressing "the strong opposition of the Department of the Treasury to the legislation requiring redesign of circulating U.S. coins."

Citing Annunzio's opposition and an informal poll of residents in one Chicago congressional district (Annunzio's), Robson spoke for the Treasury Department in stating that it now "believes that these . . . surveys are very clear indicators of public sentiment against the concept of redesign of American coins."

Robson's curveball was heightened by the representation that, if the proposal were enacted, the Mint would be unable to meet coinage redesign production requirements because of its excessive commemorative coin production.

The Treasury Department succeeded, and the move was beaten back. Reporting on the controversy in an article entitled "Cranston Coin-Design Ploy Fails," the Washington Post noted that the 75-year-old Cranston was "a social companion of the legislation's most ardent supporter, [a 38-year-old] New York socialite and former commissioner of fine arts." Dan Walters, a columnist for the Sacramento Bee, went so far as to charge that Cranston served as an advocate for a "girlfriend." Wolf's involvement had begun to tarnish the proposal.

Enter the 102nd Congress and a new chairman of the House Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs and Coinage—Representative Esteban Edward Torres (D-California)—who took a different, more enlightened view. His tenure corresponded with an explosion of commemorative coin proposals.

For the World Soccer Cup of 1994, Torres suggested a broadly based coinage program to fund the games. Soon on the table was a proposal to fund "Bill of Rights" study fellowships with a commemorative coin honoring the document's author, James Madison. Representative Marcy Kaptur (D-Ohio) proposed a coin honoring World War II vets, while Representative Kurt Weldon (R-Pennsylvania) offered a Firefighters commemorative.

To this was added the White House commemorative proposal, designed to raise $5 million to assist in the purchase and restoration of antiques in the Executive Mansion. With the backing of First Lady Barbara Bush, some lawmakers considered it a priority. The Columbian quinquennial commemorative also made an appearance; its chief sponsor was none other than the nemesis of coinage redesign, Frank Annunzio.

Torres held hearings on all the coin proposals in 1991, and it was clear that some of the commemoratives were on a fast track. Cranston made it equally clear that he would hold the proposals in exchange for coinage redesign. With the resignation of Mint Director Donna Pope after 10 years of service, Cranston also made it evident that the nomination of David J. Ryder as her successor would be postponed in the Senate pending resolution of the coin design proposal. (The Senate did not act on Ryder’s nomination. In late 1992, President Bush appointed Ryder acting director while Congress was in recess.)

Then, just when it looked as if a package deal might be struck for the Soccer and Madison commemoratives, Weldon vowed a floor battle for the Firefighters, and Kaptur was rumored to be pressing for the World War II Vets.

What resulted was a compromise that saw the Soccer, Madison, White House and Columbus proposals combined with coinage redesign, along with a promise for a Firefighters medal and strong consideration of a Veterans coin for 1995, the 50th anniversary of the end of the Second World War.

And so in early February 1992, this was the program that was cobbled with rare bipartisan support. A “Dear Colleague” letter advocating “a valuable package" that "deserves your support" was signed by Torres; Representative Chalmers P. Wylie (R-Ohio), ranking minority member of the Banking committee; Representative Henry Gonzalez, chairman of the Banking unit; and Representative Newt Gingrich (R-Georgia), minority whip. Representative Al McCandless (R-California), ranking minority member of the House coinage subcommittee, who once supported the original redesign proposal, switched horses and issued a "Dear Colleague" letter of his own to 435 members of the House of Representatives. "Is change for the sake of change (no pun intended) really necessary?" McCandless asked his colleagues. "Let's leave a good thing alone . . ."

A rumor than started that the real purpose of the legislation was to remove the motto "In God We Trust" from the national coinage—a veritable atheist's bill.

The debate began shortly before 1 o'clock on a cold February afternoon, with Torres making a strong statement favoring the proposed coinage legislation and Wylie offering tepid endorsement that he termed "strong support." Annunzio spoke, advising that if coinage redesign were offered separately, he would oppose it, but that "support for those five excellent [commemorative coin] programs will require support for changing all our nation's coinage."

McCandless then summed up his views by stating that "mandatory coin redesign is one controversy that we can avoid," and urged his colleagues to vote "no."

By 1:40 p.m. it was all over. The House embarrassed the leadership ("stunned" was the word used in the Washington Post coverage) by voting 241 to 172 to reject the proposal for coinage redesign while approving the commemoratives. Technically, the vote was to suspend the rules of the House and agree to the Senate Amendment that linked all the proposals together. When that failed, it meant that the two legislative bodies had to try to iron out their differences.

And so it was that on February 19 the House and Senate met. One emphatically wanted redesign, the other was decidedly against it. Torres was elected chair of the conference committee. The end result: adoption of a proposal that would have changed the design on the quarter and half dollar, and called for a study of changes on other denominations. It was ominous, however, that Wylie and McCandless, both on the conference committee, refused to sign the report and agree to the recommendations.

As April Fool's Day approached, McCandless addressed the Speaker and John A. Beck, Collector

COLLECTORS
& COLLECTING

A man of broad-ranging interests, John Beck assembled one of the most spectacular coin collections in the United States.

JOHN ANDREW BECK was born on January 5, 1859, in the mountain town of Chestnut Ridge in Western Pennsylvania. The Beck family moved to Texas, where they lived for several years, but Indian raids forced them back to Pennsylvania, where John's father soon opened a salt business. He drilled for salt just below "the Point," where the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers join to form the Ohio at Pittsburgh.

John attended St. Vincent's, a small college in Latrobe, Pennsylvania, east of Pittsburgh. After his father's death, he and his brothers carried on the family business. Later, John Beck bought out his brothers' interests and continued the business himself. He traveled the countryside around Pittsburgh in a horse-drawn surrey, selling groceries and his own brand of salt. The salt business grew, and Beck soon expanded into chemicals. After the discovery of oil in Titusville, Pennsylvania, he used his drilling expertise to move into the oil business. Soon Beck was a very wealthy man. He served as a director of the First National Bank of Pittsburgh and several other banks, which eventually merged into the Pittsburgh National Bank and Trust Company.

Beck the Collector

LIKE MANY EDUCATED men of his day, Beck had quite wide-ranging interests. Although he became a coin collector at the age of 10, he also had a great passion for Indian relics. His listing in The Naturalists' Directory (Fall 1917) shows his diverse pursuits:

Beck, John A., 3346 5th Ave., Pittsburg, PA. Ancient Indian Rel., Venomous Snakes of the World. Horns, Tusks, and fangs, and Curios; Coins. (N16)

As a man of means, Beck could well afford to indulge himself. Through advertisements and correspondence with major dealers around the nation, he amassed collections of unparalleled scope. Numismatists should find it

A man of means, John Beck indulged himself by amassing collections of unparalleled scope. While coins were only one of his many interests, his numismatic collection was one of the greatest ever formed in the United States.

On March 3, 1907, John Beck sent this letter of inquiry to J.S. Cauddario of Santa Fe, New Mexico, about Indian artifacts as well as private gold coins.

of interest that coin dealers David Proskey, Burdette Johnson, Charles Steigerwalt and Walter Webb each corresponded with Beck, offering Indian relics for sale. Beck's collection included important items from throughout the United States, Alaska, Canada and even Easter Island.

Beck's wife didn't share his love for curios, however. According to officials at Carnegie Institute, Beck constructed two houses side-by-side: one for his collections, one for his wife. Shortly after his death, she contacted The Carnegie and offered to donate his entire collection of Indian relics. Apparently the tone of her offer was "take this stuff now or I'm throwing it out." Several trucks were needed to haul the collection away. To this day, Beck's holdings remain a vital part of The Carnegie's research collection.

The Beck Archive

WHEN BECK'S ARTIFACT collections were donated to The Carnegie, his correspondence files were included. Twenty-one boxes of letters, post cards, rubbings and catalogs document Beck's vast acquisitions. Documents referred to in this article include their item number in the archive.

Very few copies of Beck's original letters are included; the vast majority were letters to him. Beck wrote on the letterhead of The John A. Beck Salt Co., "The Salt That Don't Get Hard" (C42).

Beck the Numismatist

WHILE COINS WERE only one of Beck's many interests, his numismatic collection was one of the greatest ever formed in this country. Beck's specialty was private and pioneer gold coinage. He purchased his coins from individuals and dealers across the country.

A local source was Jacob Roth of Roth's Bank and Trust Co. in Pittsburgh. In January 1908, Roth offered Beck an 1855 $50 round slug of Wass, Molitor & Co. for $325. In December of that year, Roth offered the following pair of coins for $60: an 1860 Mormon $5 gold and an 1849 Gregg & Norris $5 gold. Two days later, Roth offered an uncirculated Bechtler $5 piece, stating, "this coin is the finest we ever saw, and is supposed to be one of the very rarest" (R54).

Beck was a member of the Western Pennsylvania Numismatic Society (WPNS), established in 1878. Founding members of the Society included large cent collector George H. Clapp and George W. Rode, an early officer of the American Numismatic Association (ANA). Beck's correspondence includes several post card announcements of society meetings held between August 1909 and February 1911 (G20-33). At that time, the Society met every two weeks at 3:30 on Thursday afternoons at "Robinson Brothers, Bankers, 424 Wood Street," and later at Carnegie Institute. In 1911 the meetings were switched to Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. A special guest at the February 21, 1911, meeting was past ANA President Farran Zerbe.

In 1905 fellow WPNS member C.H. Shinkle of Pittsburgh published the first edition of his booklet United States Coin Values and Lists, which featured illustrations of pioneer gold pieces in Beck's collection. Beck received several letters after the book's publication; at least two correspondents offered to sell him pieces that were not listed in the book.

Beck acquired large quantities of coin issues that interested him. He hoarded 1856 Flying Eagle cents, eventually accumulating 571 pieces, more than half the total struck.

ONE COIN APPARENTLY interested Beck so much that he tried to corner the market on it. He placed ads . . . offering to buy 1856 Flying Eagle cents . . .

Dear Sir:

We have on hand to offer you One Mormon 1860, Five Dollar Gold, Lion reclining, Eagle and Beehive, also California Norris, Greggs & Norris Five Dollar Gold, 1849, Without Alloy, at $60.00, for both.

If the above coins interest you, we kindly ask you to call at our office and inspect them.

Yours very truly,

Roth's Bank & Trust Co.

On December 26, 1908, Roth's Bank and Trust Co. offered Beck two gold pieces—an 1860 Mormon $5 and an 1849 Gregg & Norris $5—for $60.

Beck the Hoarder

ONE EXAMPLE OF a coin was not enough for Beck; he acquired large quantities of certain issues that interested him. His inventory lists 102 Augustus Humbert $50 gold pieces and 931 $3 gold pieces. Perhaps Beck was an early speculator in the coin market. Another item he purchased in quantity was the first-issue 1907 $20 gold piece. He bought several from Lyman H. Low for $30 each.

One coin apparently interested Beck so much that he tried to corner the market on it. He placed ads in various numismatic publications offering to buy 1856 Flying Eagle cents at $2 each for circulated examples, $10 each for uncirculated. Beck's correspondence includes many letters from individuals and dealers offering the coins for sale. Henry Chapman sent Beck seven 1856 Flying Eagle cents—including a proof and a copper pattern—on approval at $100 (C63). Beck eventually accumulated 571 pieces, more than half the original mintage.

"YOU STATED THAT you would forward the other 20's but as yet they have not come to hand. This has caused us to miss a sale . . ."

Beck the Laggard

A RECURRING THEME in Beck's correspondence is his tardiness in responding to inquiries. As the president of several business enterprises, he certainly had quite a few demands on his time. Still, many of those who dealt with him grew impatient waiting for replies, particularly those who had sent merchandise on approval. At one point, David Proskey threatened Beck with litigation: a letter dated July 29, 1908, from Proskey's attorneys requested payment of $161 for "one dozen Indian stone pipes delivered to you last March" (B137).

Another dealer experiencing problems with Beck was B. Max Mehl. Beck did quite a bit of business with Mehl, and on February 7, 1911, Mehl wrote:

I am somewhat disappointed in not having heard from you before this in reply to my former letters regarding the amount due me. It is necessary for me to make some collections to carry on my business. Will you not kindly make a special effort to send me some sort of remittance? I shall consider it a favor on your part if you will kindly give this matter your prompt attention. (M96)

A letter dated September 12, 1916, from W.P. Brown of the Stamp & Coin Exchange in New York City reads:

Dear Sir: On July 5th I sent you 3 -1856 nickel cents for $32.00 but have since heard nothing from you. if you do not care to buy them please return them by Registered mail for which I enclose stamps. (S130)

Evidently, Beck soon made good and continued to purchase many items from Brown. A 1918 letter includes an invoice for 25 gold coins totaling $309.50 (S139A). The list includes six early eagles from 1799 to 1803, sixteen half eagles dated 1798 to 1813 and two Moffatt $5 pieces.

Beck had a lengthy exchange of correspondence with Sutro & Co. of San Francisco in 1918. On February 19 Sutro sent Beck a package of four $20 pioneer gold pieces: three Kellogg & Co. and one Wass, Molitor & Co. Beck kept the latter and mailed Sutro a check for $200. "The three Kellogg coins were returned by Wells-Fargo Express." A follow-up telegram arrived March 8, while Beck was away in Illinois. Sutro's letter of March 17 complains, "You stated that you would forward the other 20's but as yet they have not come to hand. This has caused us to miss a sale as we promised to submit them to another party and have been unable to do so on account of your not returning them." Sutro spoke too soon—the following day Beck's shipment arrived (S178-184).

The Beck Time Capsule

AT ONE POINT during the banking crisis of 1907, Beck volunteered to sell his coin collection to help keep his First National Bank of Pittsburgh afloat. Fortunately, other financing was located. Beck's collection continued to grow until his death on January 27, 1924.

According to Emerson Smith, a trust officer at Pittsburgh National Bank, the family wasn't aware that the collection had great value, and they certainly didn't need the money. The Beck heirs did not disperse the coin collection, and it remained in the bank vault for another 50 years.

In 1971 the bank contracted two separate appraisals for the collection. Abner Kreisberg of Beverly Hills, California, spent more than two weeks examining the collection and submitted an appraisal in the amount of $701,140. His bill for the appraisal, including lodging and airfare, was $4,722. Also appraising the collection was Ray Byrne of Pittsburgh, a WPNS member and U.S. Assay Commissioner. Byrne's appraisal came in at $708,969.

In January 1972 Smith contacted Stack's about selling the collection. A three-page letter from Harvey Stack outlined a "preliminary proposal of how Stack's would offer the coins for sale."

Mr. Lees (Beck's son-in-law) asked can the record prices of the 60's be repeated in the 70's. I say yes, and Stack's can do it! A careful check of the highs in the coin market during the 60's paralleled the famous Stack's sales of that period. . . . But it was not mere coincidence that the highs occurred when they did; it was a combination of a good advertising program with informative promotional material . . .

With regard to the hoard coins, it is my opinion that they be treated separately from the collection. . . . Then an analysis would be made and a direct sales brochure would be designed and mailed to our customers, and it would be advertised extensively in our trade publications. The hoard coins to be listed would not necessarily be limited to the 1856 Cents, but could include the Panama Pacific coins, Pattern Cents and any other quantity items . . . It also would be understood that were we to offer an example of any of the hoard coins in the auction catalog we would attempt to supply the underbidders with similar specimens thereby reducing the hoard.

Rumors spread through the numismatic community about the existence of the collection, and in particular, the hoard of 1856 Flying Eagles. In the summer of 1973, while attending a coin show in the Cleveland, Ohio, area, Mark Auerbach of Paramount Corporation was approached by an officer of the Pittsburgh National Bank, who showed him an inventory of the collection. The gentleman was probably Emerson Smith, still testing the waters for sale of the collection.

In 1974 Smith finally convinced the heirs to sell. He felt 1975 would be a market peak, and, as it turned out, he was right. "How I did it, I'll never know," he said, reflecting on the sale at a 1986 WPNS meeting.

The Beck Sales

THE COLLECTION EVENTUALLY was consigned to Kreisberg's "Quality Sales" corporation. Three sales were held: January 27-29, 1975; February 12-13, 1976; and February 14, 1977. The highlight of the sales was lot 729 in the first sale—a proof Kellogg $50 gold piece, one of only 13 known, which brought $120,000 (one-sixth the original estimate for the entire collection)! The three sales netted a total of approximately $6.5 million. The remaining hoard coins were gradually sold to other dealers over the next few months.

Thus, one of the greatest coin collections assembled in modern times was dispersed to the numismatic community. Catalogs, letters and memories are all that remain of John A. Beck's numismatic legacy. Nevertheless, he will be remembered as one of the great collectors in American numismatic history.

Portrait of a Queen: Vision or Reality?

Portraits of England's Elizabeth I helped perpetuate the cult of divine majesty and evolved into a symbol of the nation itself.

by Clifton Potter
ANA 119881

IT WAS IN the reign of England's Henry VII (1485-1509) that engravers at the Royal Mint first attempted to produce a numismatic image that was more a portrait than a mere metaphorical representation of majesty. By the reign of his granddaughter, Elizabeth I (1558-1603), coiners were producing remarkably accurate likenesses of their sovereign that slowly evolved into symbols far more sophisticated than the stylized frontal portraits of the early Tudor period.

Many historians have dismissed Elizabeth's retention of essentially the same portrait on her coins for over four decades as either vanity or frugality, but there is a third possibility. Elizabeth understood the importance of creating a particular impression, whether it was upon her jailer, her jealous royal sister or the entire nation; this gift for playing a part preserved her life more than once.

Surrounded by foreign monarchs hostile to her success and a nation still torn by religious controversy, Elizabeth turned to the arts to help heal England's wounds and create a sense of purpose that could carry it through any crisis. In her hands, the coinage was not merely a medium of exchange, it became a constant reminder of a resurgent England, with Elizabeth as the emblem of its evolving greatness.

As the years passed, her image remained unchanged, ever glorious. Only death could rob the nation of its greatest treasure. Forty years after her reign ended, another generation would look at the worn and clipped coins in their hands, curse the Civil War that was destroying their country, and long for the halcyon days of "Good Queen Bess." This remarkable transformation of England's coinage into a currency respected at home and abroad, as well as an intimation of the nation's destiny, was accomplished in spite of the financial mistakes of her predecessors, in particular those committed in the latter years of her father's reign.

Henry VIII (1509-47) spent a fortune keeping abreast of all the latest

On the obverse of the gold ryal (top), Elizabeth is depicted on a caravel with a light stern and low, pointed prow, in contrast to the slow, medieval cog found on the coins of her predecessors. A gold 30 shillings (bottom) shows Elizabeth enthroned wearing her robes of state.

Many authorities believe the silver crowns of 1601 (shown) and 1602 represent a fairly accurate portrait of Elizabeth I in her last years. ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM fashions on the continent, but after his death in 1547 his successors were forced by his extravagance and disastrous monetary policies to husband their resources. Even Elizabeth was restricted in her patronage of the arts to the exclusive support of English talent. When foreign painters journeyed to her realm, their visits were brief. Protestant artists seeking refuge in the 1560s soon discovered that the court preferred the neo-medieval style in vogue among the more popular native craftsmen to the modern ideas and techniques they represented. The development of this uniquely English style was the result not merely of personal preference, but also administrative decisions.

Most wealthy English families sought to own a portrait of the queen to demonstrate their loyalty, particularly after Elizabeth was formally excommunicated by the Pope in 1570. This increased demand for the royal likeness—often the focal point of an entire collection—came at a time when canvases were the latest fashion in wall hangings. Unfortunately, the demand for royal portraits led to a decline in quality.

Among the State Papers Domestic is a proclamation prepared in 1563, intended to limit the production of paintings of Elizabeth to artists licensed by the government. It was quite specific in describing the method of disseminating the royal visage. Once a pattern portrait that satisfied the queen was completed, it was then to be circulated so it might be copied by artists who wished to reproduce the royal image.

Anxious to protect the interests of English painters while maintaining jurisdiction over the quality of the royal portraits produced by all English artists, Elizabeth I chose to incorporate the Company of Painter-Stainers. By doing this, she increased her control over the standards of artistic production, while creating for the first time a monopoly in the realm of royal portraiture for the serjeant painters. This reform produced a style of painting unlike any other in Europe.

These Elizabethan limners were influenced more by the illuminated manuscripts of the Middle Ages than the innovations of the Italian Renaissance with which they were almost totally unfamiliar. The best portraits produced by this school are reminiscent of the icons produced in the Byzantine tradition, while those less skillfully executed resemble inn signs. Unfortunately, these regulations were difficult to implement, and in 1596 the Privy Council was forced to order the destruction of all portraits of Elizabeth that did not meet her directives.

Between 1563 and 1596 the artistic interpretation of the queen underwent a remarkable transformation. The 1559 portrait of Elizabeth in her coronation robes depicts a young woman in her middle 20s who is almost overwhelmed by the panoply of state; the so-called "Ditchly Portrait," probably painted in 1592, depicts a woman still blessed with youth, but one who is mistress of herself as well as her realm. In the space of a generation, the queen had been transformed into the symbol of the nation.

Probably neither portrait offers an accurate representation of the real Elizabeth. There exists only one account of the queen actually sitting for a portrait, by Nicholas Hilliard, her favorite painter. This reluctance to pose accounts for the great variety of officially sanctioned images of Elizabeth.

Although no actual pattern books or lists of instructions survive, artists must have possessed such information because certain identical elements as jewelry, fabrics, decoration and clothing appear in portraits by artists working simultaneously in different parts of the country. Many of the components familiar in the painted and printed likenesses of Elizabeth also appear in the designs of her coins, suggesting that the assumption found in official documents that the images were universally copied is correct.

Elizabeth's fear of growing old is well documented, but the absence of an accurate description of her appearance is not due solely to feminine vanity. Deliberately transformed by poets and artists into a timeless beauty, the younger daughter of Henry VIII became Elizabeth the Queen, the perfect symbol of England, the national icon, a talisman against the ills of the world.

Elizabeth permitted her subjects to wear her portrait in a frame suspended from a chain or ribbon. They might be medals, painted miniatures (an art form popular since the reign of her father) or carved cameos (which became the rage during the queen's lifetime). Elizabeth often gave these miniatures as marks of her favor, and as a result of her patronage, a school of painters who specialized in portrait miniatures developed. The most skilled practitioners of this art form were Nicholas Hilliard and his pupil, Isaac Oliver.

Like the larger portraits, these images resemble icons in style and execution. Elizabeth's insistence that she always be represented in full sunlight without shadows forced the artist to produce a likeness in which the lines were precise and the color uniform. This preference for a style more medieval than modern was not merely born of the queen's desire to be eternally young, but also from her wish to perpetuate the cult of divine majesty with which she surrounded herself.

The wearing of the royal image was not merely a universally popular fashion; by the end of the reign it had achieved almost a religious significance. While the hierarchy of the Anglican Church did not condone the use of religious images, it did not object to the cult that surrounded Elizabeth and her likenesses in any form. In a sense, she came to replace the Virgin Mary as the protectress of the nation. This elevation of the queen to a status approaching sainthood continued long after her death.

While the wealthy and the powerful might be able to purchase portraits of their sovereign, and the courtiers might display the image of Elizabeth in cleverly wrought frames suspended by chains of gold or ribbons of silk, the common folk who loved their queen almost to the point of worship could not afford these images of majesty. Some were able to buy medals commemorating great events in the reign of "Gloriana," but most had to be satisfied with a coin, carefully holed and suspended by a ribbon, to ward off the nameless evils from which their sovereign lady's image guarded them. The coins of the realm—and there was a greater variety of denominations during the lifetime of Elizabeth than in any other reign—were designed according to the rules that governed the fashioning of other images of the queen, since they were based on the same patterns.

As Court Embosser of Medals and Gold, Nicholas Hilliard had the right to supervise the work of the chief engraver at the Mint, but his main influence lay in the design of medals and seals. He left the production of coins to Derrick Anthony, although stylistic concepts associated with Hilliard's work in several other media exerted a strong influence on coin design throughout the reign.

Appointed chief engraver on September 29, 1551, Anthony held the office until his death on July 12, 1599, when his son, Charles, assumed his place. The younger Anthony served a long apprenticeship under his father, mastering the various skills required of a coiner and engraver. His numismatic portraits of the queen produced at the end of her reign are considered to be among the best-executed representations of her in any medium. Together, the Anthonys produced a coinage that was varied, uncluttered in design, and graced with letters in Roman script instead of the Lombardic lettering characteristic of most designs of previous reigns.

stances, developed in later life a passion for clothes. This love of ornate dress is evident in the designs for her coinage; in fact, it is the dominant element. Elaborate costumes decorated with Elizabeth's favorite jewels from the royal collection are found on the obverses of most of the 20 denominations that appeared during her reign.

During the initial phase of her coinage (1558-61), Elizabeth wisely chose to continue striking pieces according to the standards in force under her sister, Mary. The output of silver shillings, groats, twopences and pennies was minimal. The number of fine gold (23ct. 3½ grains) sovereigns valued at 30 shillings, ryals of 15 shillings, angels of 10 shillings, and half-angels of 5 shillings was very small. The bulk of the gold produced during this period was in the form of "crown" gold (22kt) half-pounds valued at 10 shillings, crowns of 5 shillings and half-crowns of 2 shillings 6 pence.

The positive psychological effect on the staff at the Mint as well as the general population was tremendous, and when the great recoinage was completed, the public received the new coins with enthusiasm. As the years passed, gold continued to decline in importance in comparison to silver, but gold coins in both standards were struck throughout the reign.

Despite the positive changes made in the coinage, Englishmen were faced with a shortage of small change, which made everyday transactions difficult. As inflation forced prices to rise, the populace grew accustomed to a range of larger denominations in both gold and silver. The gold sovereign, the silver crown and the shilling were all Tudor innovations. These larger denominations were easier and cheaper to strike than the smaller halfpennies and farthings, but the latter two were more useful in making change.

So that it might concentrate on lower denominations intended to alleviate the shortage of small change, the Mint suspended the striking of shillings from 1561 to 1582, as there were enough pieces of an acceptable weight dating from the reigns of Edward VI and Mary I to satisfy public demand. Sixpences, threepences, three-halfpences and three-farthing pieces began to pour from the Mint, but still the public demanded more. The latter two denominations were struck to allow people to complete transactions using the devalued base coins still in circulation, but once these pieces were completely withdrawn from the circulating medium, the striking of 1½ pence and ¾ pence ceased. These new coins bore a rose behind the queen's head to denote their restored fineness—.925 as opposed to the previous .916.

Elizabeth's depiction is little changed from the time this gold half pound of 1560-61 (top) was struck to the issuance of this half crown of 1601 (bottom).

Elizabeth's fear of aging is well documented. She was the subject of the "Iris" portrait while in her mid 60s (c. 1600).

Specimen and Experimental Buffaloes

IN 1989 THE numismatic community was stunned by the announcement that three 1927-P nickels had been certified as "specimen" strikings by the Numismatic Guaranty Corporation (NGC). Since that time, two additional examples of this remarkable issue surfaced and reportedly have been certified by NGC.

Everyone who saw them agreed that these coins were special. Their exact nature remains something of a mystery. They possess the following distinguishing features: extremely sharp detail, squared lettering and borders, wire rims, and a satiny obverse and reverse with reflective edges. These characteristics are common to proof coins, and, indeed, the 1927 "specimen" nickels have been compared to the Type I "satin-finish" proofs of 1936.

Further enhancing their status as proof coins is that the reverse of each coin exhibits certain flaws diagnostic of the proof nickels of 1913-16. Such flaws are so shallow they appear only on Buffalo nickels struck twice in perfect register to bring up all details. Only proof coins qualify on this count. Among the flaws seen on the reverse of proofs dated 1913-16 and 1927 are a thin line running along the rim from 7 to 9 o'clock and a triangular defect to the right of the E in UNITED.

After studying one of the first three pieces discovered, Walter Breen wrote,

This certifies that I have examined the accompanying coin and that I unhesitatingly declare it a genuine 1927 Satin Finish Proof Buffalo nickel.

Compared to Uncirculated business strikes of 1927, the present coin is overwhelmingly superior: sharper in all relief details (hair, feathers, bison's hide), with "squared" inner rims, broad flat rims with complete knife rims, in all details comparable to 1913-16 and 1936 "Type I" Proofs.

NO WORSE
.....
BY DAVID W. LANGE

Surfaces are satin finish and untampered. (The diagonal line on [the] reverse flat rim about 8 o'clock is in the original die from which hubs and working dies came; no business strikes are brought up enough in strike to show it.)

All features point to at least two perfectly aligned blows from the dies, as [is] normal in Proofs but not business strikes. Surfaces are like those of [the] "Roman finish" 1909-10 gold Proofs, and certain Proof commemoratives.

To call this coin unprecedented is reasonable; to call it extraordinary is an understatement.

Speculation about why and how such coins were made has led to several theories. The first relates to the Mint's chief engraver from 1925-47, John R. Sinnock, who had a known taste for matte or satin proofs and on several occasions had examples struck for his own collection. Generally such clandestine activities were limited to new designs, commemorative half dollars being a particular favorite. Several unofficial proof coins turned up in his estate when it was auctioned in 1962. The auction catalog did not mention specimen or proof nickels dated 1927, but several examples of this date were included with other Buffalo nickels in multiple-coin lots. Again, no special status was attached to these coins, but it is believed now that the five or more specimen strikes now known were among those unassuming nickels.

Another possible explanation offered is that these coins were struck for presentation to members of the annual Assay Commission. The time-honored custom of assembling government officials and distinguished members of the general public to test the standards of the nation's coinage was performed early in each calendar year until suspended by President Carter in 1977. The public members of the commission each received a specially prepared medal for their participation, marking the occasion.

No records are known that actual coinage was distributed to commission members, and it seems likely that if such were undertaken, the humble

5-cent piece would hardly have been considered a fitting souvenir. A silver dollar or gold piece would probably have been deemed more appropriate. All things considered, this particular explanation for the existence of proof or specimen nickels dated 1927 does not merit much consideration.

The most intriguing theory postulates that these coins were test pieces resulting from the Mint's experiments with chromium-plated dies and collars. The Annual Report of the Director of the Mint for fiscal years 1928 and 1929 reveal that the Philadelphia Mint began such experiments when commissioned to produce coinage for the nation of Ecuador. These pure nickel coins were more destructive to dies and machinery than the alloys previously used. The 1929 report states that chromium plating was successful in completing the Ecuadoran coinage, but the average die-life was shorter than when coining copper-nickel. Perhaps some coinage was struck with chromium-plated dies using copper-nickel planchets. Otherwise, no valid comparison could have been made. Since the U.S. 5-cent piece is routinely struck in copper-nickel, might such coins have been used as test pieces for chromium plating?

The nickel coins struck for Ecuador are dated 1928. The description of chromium-plating experiments included in the 1928 report (which covers the period from July 1, 1927, through June 30, 1928) suggests that the Ecuadoran coinage was struck early in the year. It is possible that initial experiments may have been performed using regular U.S. coin dies dated 1927. Whether this accounts for the 1927 specimen nickels is uncertain, since no specific supporting documentation is known.

Mark Van Winkle believes he has found proof that links chromium-plated dies to these special strikings. His 1990 Numismatic Theatre presentation at the ANA's 99th Anniversary Convention in Seattle, Washington, revealed information auxiliary to that found in the Mint Director's reports. A close examination of the surfaces of one of the 1927 specimen nickels revealed the presence of a phenomenon known as "micro-cracking."

In conversations with George Hunter, director of technology for the U.S. Mint, Van Winkle learned that chromium plating had been used routinely for the preparation of proof dies since 1972. In addition to extending the useful life of a proof die, one side effect of this practice is the appearance of micro-cracking. This is described as a "crazing pattern" or "dry-riverbed look" in the fields of a coin. Of course, for micro-cracking to be present on the coin, it must have been present on the die. The concentration of micro-cracking is greatest near the edge of the coin, and it cannot be seen without magnification. Although it occurs routinely on proof coins struck during the past 20 years, it is unknown on circulation strikes. The only other appearance is on the 1927 specimen nickels.

Combining two of these theories may provide a possible explanation for these unusual coins. If experiments were conducted with copper-nickel planchets using chromium-plated, Buffalo nickel dies, wouldn't the resulting coins have made a nice addition to Chief Engraver Sinnock's collection of private rarities? The proof commemorative coins that turned up in Sinnock's estate were once unimaginable, but now are established as fact. If these nickels have not been fully accepted as genuine proofs, perhaps they should be.

Grading of Mint State U.S. Coins

If you can't personally attend one of the ANA's Grading seminars this informative new video is the best way to sharpen your grading skills. Narrated by J.P. Martin, who has taught more people the basics of grading than anyone in the history of numismatics, this professionally produced video focuses on silver dollars, Walking Liberty halves, coppers and gold. You will learn:

- History and evolution of grading
- Technical versus market grading
- Four factors of eye appeal
- The types of luster
- Whizzing, cleaning, thumbing and artificial frosting

The video even gives you the opportunity to grade coins pictured on the screen - with immediate feedback from the instructor.

#VI 005 $39.95 VHS Only

"The video is excellent. J.P. teaches with close-up views of actual coins, making the viewer feel as if they are in a private seminar receiving his personal instruction."

F.M. FAZZARI.

From Insight on Coinage.

"This script is the best discussion of commercial grading I have ever seen."

KEN BRESSETT.

Noted Numismatic Scholar.

"This video is a must if you don't know how to grade or want to reinforce your grading skills."

ANTHONY SWIATEK

Co-author "Silver & Gold Commemorative Coins"

"I was delighted to see that it addressed every single area which I feel is important, in fact crucial, to understanding today's grading standards. The difference between market grading (the real world) and technical grading (the more theoretical approach), were covered in depth and were especially well explained."

I very strongly endorse this presentation, and suggest that anyone can benefit from it . . . beginner or seasoned collector. It is concise, with excellent illustrations, and very user friendly. The $39.95 price is a bargain for this 88 minute seminar, as it could easily pay for itself through the purchase (or non-purchase) of one coin."

Author of The Cherrypicker's Guide.

New Exhibit Ideas

THIS MONTH'S COLUMN is a result of observations made at several ANA anniversary conventions, especially the most recent, in Orlando. As a dealer, I am usually busy at my bourse table. However, I always take time to view the educational exhibits of coins, tokens, paper money and other items. Unfortunately, this year I didn't have to spend much time. Although the exhibits included some excellent displays, they were rather sparse in number and some categories were thinly represented, if at all.

Since nearly everyone has the desire to share with others and "show and tell," I wondered why the exhibits were so few. The following comments concerning this situation are really just suggestions—points to ponder.

First, it goes without saying that exhibits are worthwhile. People like to visit museums and tourist attractions. Individuals in many walks of life enjoy seeing and experiencing things they haven't seen or done before. The ANA should make it as easy as possible for members to display their items.

Making exhibiting easy immediately presents a problem. The "Bowers and Merena Reference Collection of Commemorative Coins" was an attraction at the 101st Anniversary Convention in Orlando. There was no problem setting it up, as our staff came to the convention early and stayed late. ANA rules specify that the exhibit be in place before the show opens and remain on display until the convention closes.

As noted, this is not a problem for dealers such as myself, who attend conventions from beginning to end—but most members don't do that. Rather, they come for a day or two and then go home. After all, the show is in the middle of summer, and family members often have other vacation plans. In addition, staying at a hotel and paying for meals for the better part of a week isn't exactly inexpensive.

What is the solution to this problem? Obviously the exhibits would be in disarray if they could be set up and taken down any old time. If this were done, someone attending the convention on Wednesday might see different exhibits than someone attending on Friday or Saturday.

I suggest that someone on the ANA staff be available to receive exhibits, set them up on behalf of the exhibitor, and take them down at the end of the convention. Sure this wouldn't be easy. First of all, handling someone else's precious numismatic items requires that the items themselves be encased in holders or otherwise protected. Then, there is the matter of insurance. Finally, there is the matter of how the exhibit should be arranged.

I am not proposing solutions, just raising questions. However, we prepare test layouts for the "Bowers and Merena Reference Collection" before each show. Then, at the show itself, anyone on our staff can set up the exhibit, even if they haven't seen it before, simply by following a diagram.

For a particularly valuable exhibit, insurance coverage can cost hundreds of dollars or more. Perhaps the ANA should get insurance for exhibitors up to a certain amount per exhibit. In this way, someone who shows coins would know they would be covered in the event of a loss.

Also, although encapsulated coins are part of the current collecting scene, I recall seeing only a single slabbed coin among the exhibits at the ANA show this year. Perhaps people feel that slabs and exhibiting don't go together. This can't be true. A couple years ago, the Professional Coin Grading Service (PCGS) mounted a $10 million exhibit of silver dollars containing only slabbed pieces. However, smaller exhibits of encapsulated specimens are almost nonexistent at the ANA and other shows. Perhaps somebody should break the ice by displaying an encapsulated set of proof Liberty Head nickels or some other series.

This brings up another point. In recent years I have seen few exhibits of regular United States coin series. When did you last see a date set of Indian Head cents, Peace dollars, Franklin half dollars or Standing Liberty quarters exhibited at an ANA convention?

About 10 years ago, I saw a set of Seated Liberty quarter dollars at a major show. Some of the pieces were uncirculated or proof, but many were in Very Fine and Extremely Fine condition. Some issues, such as the 1842 "small date" and 1873-CC "without arrows," were not represented at all. I told the exhibitor I found the display very interesting. He replied that people had been congratulating him throughout the show—particularly Seated Liberty specialists who had despaired of ever seeing such coins displayed!

Your personal collection probably contains the ingredients for an interesting display. There is nothing wrong with showing a set of Lincoln cents, Jefferson nickels or Carson City Morgan dollars.

I suggest that a special section at next year's ANA conventions be set aside for exhibits of single numismatic items. That's right—an exhibit category and special section for displaying just one coin, note, token, or numismatic catalog or book. The requirements would be as follows:

1) Only a single item can be shown (or two identical varieties or types, so that both obverse and reverse can be displayed).

2) The item should be accompanied by printed material, including a written description, illustrations, reference books, and other material telling the "story" of the piece.

I suspect many ANA members who would not wish to pack up and insure an entire set or specialized category would be willing to exhibit a single coin from their collection. Single-coin exhibits would be easy to manage, and an ANA staff member could set up the case to the owner's specifications.

Here are some ideas for a single-item exhibit, just to get the ball rolling:

1) A 1964 Kennedy half dollar accompanied by copies of articles from Coin World, Numismatic News, The Numismatist, Coins magazine, COINage and other periodicals telling about the new issue and its release. Photographs of John F. Kennedy and designer Gilroy Roberts, and a list of 1960s current events (top movies, songs, fads, national news events) would complete the exhibit.

2) An obsolete bank note from the town of your choice. This could be accompanied by post cards showing the town in later years, information concerning the officers and directors of the issuing bank (usually obtainable from the state banking commissioner), and an explanation of the note's design.

3) A 1903-O Morgan dollar. An uncirculated specimen of this piece listed for $1,500 in the 1963 edition of A Guide Book of United States Coins (the "Red Book") and was considered the rarest and most desirable of Morgan dollars. Then the U.S. Treasury Department released a great hoard, and its value sank as low as $17.50. The coin might be accompanied by back issues of the Red Book showing prices; articles about the October 1962 release; and perhaps a related article or two from the Coin Dealer Newsletter. A picture of the New Orleans Mint, an enlarged photograph of the coin (in all cases, photographs make numismatic items easier to observe), and a commentary or historical review of 1903 New Orleans could be added.

4) A 1909 VDB cent. One of the least expensive of all American coins with a "story," an uncirculated 1909 VDB cent can be obtained for about $10—no need for insurance here! This coin could be accompanied by newspaper clippings about the release of the Lincoln cent in the summer of 1909, an article from The Numismatist about the controversial initials on the reverse, some biographical information about Lincoln, and information about designer Victor D. Brenner.

5) A Spanish-American silver coin recovered from a shipwreck such as the Atocha. Finding photographs and information for this display would be a snap.

You get the idea. I have deliberately selected inexpensive items. Actually, at the other end of the spectrum, single-coin exhibits have been around for a long time—witness the 1804 silver dollar and the 1913 Liberty Head nickel, which have occupied showcases on their own from time to time. A proof 1898 Morgan dollar, believed to be the finest certified, was in a case by itself at the recent ANA show.

As a viewer or exhibit judge, I have seen first place awarded when there was only one or possibly two entries in a category. At least a single-coin exhibit category would engender competition. The judging could be based on originality, the educational and interest value of the accompanying materials, and the quality (but not value) of the item itself.

The next time you attend an ANA convention, wouldn't you like to see dozens of different, individual coins, medals, tokens, notes and other items—each with an interesting story? I know I would. I will volunteer to be among such exhibitors.

A coin that comes to mind as I write this is a worn 1860-O Seated Liberty silver dollar that I bought for $550 at the recent ANA show. The 1860-O, in Very Fine condition, is a ho-hum coin, you say—and it is. After all, uncirculated pieces are common. However, this is no ordinary 1860-O. Indeed, it may be unique, for it is boldly counterstamped twice on the obverse with a Costa Rican government seal. During the late 19th century, Costa Rica counterstamped coins of various foreign lands for circulation within the country.

I showed this piece to several Seated Liberty dollar specialists, and none had seen or heard of such a thing. Later, I wrote an article about it for The Gobrecht Journal, the official organ of the Seated Liberty Collectors Club. This is a piece that might be of great interest if its historical background were known.

Perhaps these ideas will stimulate others to come up with thoughts about improving exhibits. Maybe some will breathe new enthusiasm and life into one of the most significant features of our annual conventions. •

BRONZES OF MITHRADATES VI OF PONTUS

THE LAST GREAT HELLENISTIC KING

Mithradates VI Eupator Dionysos (120-63 B.C.), king of Pontus on the southern shore of the Black Sea, was the last Hellenistic king to be wholly independent of Rome. At the height of his power, he ruled an empire that extended from the Crimea to the north, to Byzantium to the southwest, Colchis to the southeast, and Cappadocia to the south. Regarding Mithradates as a threat to her authority in the East, Rome fought three bitter wars (89-85 B.C., 83-82 B.C., and 74-63 B.C.) to subdue this proud monarch, who committed suicide rather than submit to Roman authority. The most infamous example of the savagery of these wars occurred in 88 B.C. In an effort to totally eradicate Roman influence in Asia Minor (modern Turkey), Mithradates ordered the slaughter of all Romans and Italians and their families in the cities under his control. Known as the "Asian Vespers," the massacre claimed between 80,000 and 150,000 people according to ancient sources.

Mithradates, whose family origins can be traced to Persian nobility, claimed descent from Darius I of Persia and from Alexander the Great and Seleucus I. By claiming this dual descent, Mithradates presented himself to his Asiatic subjects as the eastern king foretold in prophecies who would drive out the invaders from the West (i.e. the Romans), and to his Greek subjects as the champion of hellenism against the Roman barbarians. Portraits of the king depicted him as the new Alexander.

Bronze coins issued by the cities under Mithradates' control bore the themes of the king's propaganda. The hero Perseus figures prominently on this coinage. Perseus, slayer of the Gorgon Medusa, was claimed as an ancestor both by Alexander the Great and by the kings of Persia. Ares, the Greek god of war also appears on the bronzes, as does Nike, goddess of Victory. The appearance of these two divinities from the Greek pantheon on the coinage of Mithradates was especially appropriate to a king whose lifetime was largely spent waging war in the pursuit of victory over the Romans. Thus, these bronzes symbolized Mithradates links to the Greek and Persian worlds and his attempt to be a bridge between those two worlds.

Due to a recent purchase, we are able to offer two major types of these interesting bronzes. These types were struck at a number of cities in the kingdom, such as the port of Amisus on the southern shore of the Black Sea.

A Grim Reminder of Czechoslovakia's Past

AS MENTIONED IN previous columns, bank notes often carry visual messages. During the latter part of 1989, the Eastern European countries, once puppets of the USSR, one by one began to sever that affiliation. Four decades of repression was vented as people young and old congregated in the streets and spoke out against their oppressors.

As the "velvet revolution" unfolded in Czechoslovakia, a bank note designed six months to one year earlier was issued. The message it conveyed was openly rejected. The grim portrait of Klement Gottwald, founder of the Communist party in Czechoslovakia, occupied the face of the 100-korun note (P[ick] 98). Gottwald had pushed his way up through the ranks, and in 1948 he became Czechoslovakia's first Communist president. He died mysteriously in 1953.

When the people of Czechoslovakia saw this note, they were enraged. The notes that entered circulation were defaced or severely crumpled. With pen, pencil or any sharp instrument, the eyes of the portrait were obliterated, and eyeglasses and a mustache frequently were added. The government immediately stopped printing and issuing the notes.

Nevertheless, about 20 million bills had been printed. This meant that a large number remained in bank vaults. Quickly, the plates for the previously issued 100-korun notes (P90) were returned to the printing presses. To differentiate the new notes from the original issue, the emergency notes were printed on paper carrying a different watermark, which consisted of a linden leaf and a five-pointed star. (This is good news for paper money buffs, since it creates another variety to collect.)

In September 1991, one year after the rejected 100-korun note was issued, I stopped in Czechoslovakia on my way to Austria and Hungary. I was surprised to see both the Gottwald and emergency notes in circulation, although the former was in the minority. It seems that the move to a democratic society had caused some pain, including financial discomfort. The people of Czechoslovakia had made their statement in 1989, and now the rejected 100-korun note was just a piece of paper money, something that served a need and nothing else.

The Gottwald note was designed by Albin Brunovský and engraved by Bohumil Šneider, whom I met in Prague. I have a great deal of respect for Šneider's work, but I doubt if he felt any humiliation when he saw his engraving defaced. After all, it was not his excellent engraving of a man with an icy stare that was rejected, just the message it carried.

Czechoslovakia's 100-korun note is one of the paper issues that have become a tangible part of the revolutions in Eastern Europe—something that is collectable today. This year we were to have seen some new paper money in Czechoslovakia, all to be executed by the excellent engravers at the State Printing Works in Prague. This series apparently has been canceled, because it now appears that Czechoslovakia will be divided into two separate republics—one for the Czech region and one for the Slovak section. This, of course, means that collectors will soon have not one, but two, new series of notes to collect from what once was Czechoslovakia. •

Bohumil Šneider engraved the grim portrait of Klement Gottwald that occupies the face of Czechoslovakia's 100-korun note.

Colorado's Missing Gold Medal

OPERAS WERE THE soaps of yesteryear set to music. Finely defined, they are dramas, wholly or mostly sung, consisting of recitatives, arias, choruses, duets and the like, with orchestral accompaniment, appropriate costuming, scenery and action. While some operas have origin in fact, most are fantasy. And, when we think of opera, the Germany of Wagner or the Italy of Puccini first come to mind.

Surprisingly, America has little opera to call its own. One of the few, The Ballad of Baby Doe, belongs to Colorado—has its story and setting here in Colorado—and is based on historical fact. The opera's national debut came on April 3, 1958, at the New York City Center, with Beverly Sills singing the lead.

The story begins in 1880, the tale of a rough-and-tumble, hardscrabble miner who hit it rich—richer than he, Horace A.W. Tabor, or his wife, Augusta Tabor, could ever imagine possible. It is also the story of a pitiful, but very beautiful young belle with the improbable last name of Doe. With her huge, round, brown eyes, she made the sobriquet, Baby Doe, inevitable.

Hailing from Oshkosh, Wisconsin, she follows her young husband, Harvey Doe, to Colorado to help him seek his fortune. He becomes the camp ne'er-do-well, and she becomes the apple of Horace Tabor's eye. As fate dictates, the classic love triangle forms. Tabor abandons Augusta for a daughter's-age Baby Doe.

William Jennings Bryan and President Chester Arthur reflect the national political climate of the day—the bitter fight over free gold versus silver coinage. Their roles weigh heavily on the outcome of the story.

Tabor makes his money from silver, price-supported by the Sherman Silver Purchase Act. His ambitions stretch across the country; he is named a U.S. Senator to fill a vacancy. Life in Washington would be better without his tight-fisted wife, Augusta. He asks for a divorce and marries Baby Doe. President Arthur is the guest of honor at the wedding.

Unfortunately, Tabor's timing is askew. The second marriage takes place before the divorce. The specter of bigamy ends any promise of a political future, but the lovebirds settle down to try to spend his money as fast as he makes it. For a decade, life is wedded bliss, and they are blessed with two daughters of their own.

In real life, as in fictional opera, lovers seldom live happily ever afterward. Their downfall—and it is precipitous—is caused by the repeal of the same Congressional act that made Tabor so wealthy. The government stops buying silver, and the bottom falls out of the Tabors' world. They go from very rich to very poor in a few short years.

As Horace Tabor dies a broken man, he dictates to his wife, "Hang on to the Matchless, Baby, hang on to the Matchless." When money runs out, she moves into the machinery shed at the Matchless Mine, a mine that still holds promise. When her clothes wear out, she dresses in rags; when the floors get too cold, she puts her feet in shoeboxes stuffed with newspapers. But she never stops dreaming of the day when silver returns.

Baby Doe Tabor finds a lessee for the Matchless Mine from time to time, but the prospects always prove discouraging. She bides her time by keeping a diary or writing poetry. When even the paper gives out, she continues writing—on bits and scraps, and backs and insides of envelopes.

Her death is as tragic as her life. She is found frozen to death in the unheated shed she called home.

Perhaps Baby Doe Tabor found solace in rereading her notes from better days. Ironically, in her diary is mention of a numismatic item. Had she saved but one, or had one of the 100 or more made been returned to her, she may have had money for heat in the shed that night in 1935.

"I had everything," Baby Doe wrote. "Beauty, grace and charm were mine, as well as a loving husband who lavished every conceivable extravagant attention on me." Lamenting that neighbors never called socially, that all doors were closed to her, she continued, "I might have felt this disappointment more poignantly if I hadn't been sustained by the happy knowledge that I was to have a

" 'I hope it's a girl,' he would whisper to me fondly.

"And the baby was a girl. She was born July 13, 1884 . . .

No examples of the gold medallion are known, not even in the collection of the Colorado Historical Society, heir to the meager belongings found in the shack after Baby Doe died. •

What a Tangled Web They Weave

COIN DEALERS ARE a colorful group. They tell great stories and are ideal subjects for capturing the public's attention with their exploits and remarkable business activities. Non-collectors are intrigued by accounts of coin dealers' paying customers high prices for coins that had been all but forgotten for years.

So, it was not unusual for a reporter to sense a good story when he heard about a new coin dealer starting up business in his town. The reporter reviewed an advertisement the dealer was about to run in the local newspaper and called on him to see if he might find a feature story for his column.

The dealer was pleased to learn he had been selected for an interview and happy to get the additional publicity for his new business venture. Like all good salesmen, he was charming and had plenty of good stories to share with the reporter. His credentials were impressive, and he had been in the mail-order business for a long time before opening the store.

Good reporters don't know everything about the subjects they cover, but they know how to verify what they write. The dealer's membership in the American Numismatic Association and some other groups sounded impressive. The reporter was interested enough to try to find out more about what this meant. He figured that a related comment in the story would add to the dealer's standing in the industry.

It was easy for the reporter to pick up the phone and find the right person to talk to at ANA headquarters. He was put in touch with the Membership Department to verify the dealer's status and to learn more about the ANA. Then the fun began.

The dealer was not a current member of the ANA. In fact, he hadn't been a member for several years—not since he was suspended for charges of

This month's special comes from one of the many official-sounding "mints" that sell coins from time to time. In case you've forgotten, these are not the real United States Mint. They just have fancy names that sound like the real thing.

This special offering comes from Washington, D.C. (where there is no United States Mint facility), and promotes Carson City Morgan dollars that are, as they say, "Rediscovered Treasure from the Vaults of the United States Government."

These uncirculated silver dollars are dated 1882, 1883 or 1884. According to the mailer, they were "certified, graded and sealed by the U.S. Government." The coins are priced at an incredible $195 for a single coin, plus $5 for postage, handling and insurance. If you are a real masochist, you can purchase two for only $390, plus $5, or all three dates for $495, plus postage.

File #316

If you have any money left after being taken by that last promotion, you might consider buying a few of the amazing John F. Kennedy commemorative half dollars that are offered in some newspaper advertisements. These are guaranteed to relieve you of any remaining interest in collecting.

This new commemorative is not a half dollar at all, no matter what the bold headline in the advertisement says. It is not even a real coin, despite the illustration that looks exactly like a Kennedy half dollar, except for its date. After you read all the fine print, you learn that it is not even the size shown in the ad, but is, in fact, only a 9mm replica of the real coin.

You'll have to act fast on this one. It is a first-time offer and won't be continued after the 30th anniversary of Kennedy's assassination on November 22. After that, they will become treasured heirlooms, ideal as keepsakes or gifts. On that point I will agree. You won't be able to do much with them except keep them forever or give them away.

These "Commemorative Half Dollars" are said to be made of solid, 14kt gold, but don't let that fool you. There can only be a couple dollars' worth of the precious metal in anything this tiny and thin. So you don't lose any of these tiny treasures, they come to you permanently mounted in an attractive "Collector's Folio" suitable for storage or display.

There is a slight difference in the design of these pieces compared to the real coin—they are dated 1963-1993. I guess that's what makes them commemoratives and why they are so expensive. You'll have to pay $10, plus $2.50 postage and handling, but you can get a discount if you buy several for relatives and friends.

I haven't figured out what type of mathematics the promoter used to compute the enormous savings when purchasing multiples. Ten at $60 postpaid does seem like a $65 savings, but I don't yet see how I am going to save $150 by buying 20 for only $100 postpaid. I guess they thought I might send in 20 separate orders and include postage with each of them. As a matter of fact, anyone dumb enough to order these might just do that.

File #317

World War II is another milestone of history being commemorated with coins this year. I imagine interest in this event will be the subject of many coins, medals and sets. You can expect to see numerous promotions for this kind of material in magazines and newspapers right through 1995 and the 50th anniversary of peace.

There wasn't much new about the advertisement I recently saw offering a set of wartime coins in a colorful, descriptive folder. The set includes a 1943 steel cent; a silver nickel of 1942-45; and a silver dime, quarter and half dollar of that era. It's a nice set of coins, and, yes, it is worthy of saving for your children to remind them of the war.

The only problem I have with this promotion is the price. At $39.95, plus $4 postage, it's a bit costly. The special, full-color holder is attractive, but hardly justifies the hefty cost for a set of otherwise common coins. There is no indication of the condition of the pieces, so they likely are well worn and probably cleaned. I think just about any dealer could match this offer with better-looking coins for $10 or less.

Keep on the lookout for promotions like this one. There are bound to be many more over the next few years.

File #318

A recent order form from the Treasury Department looked and sounded so much like other hyped-up promotions that I had to make sure it was official. It advertised a bicentennial medal commemorating the founding of the United States Mint.

The medal is extremely attractive, but the ad failed to tell what it is or, for that matter, anything about the Mint or what is depicted on the medal. It did explain in great detail that all sales are final and not subject to refund, that credit cards orders will be billed immediately and cannot be canceled, and that the Mint has the right to limit quantities.

This mailing also made it clear that delivery could take three months or longer. The price for the 3-inch bronze version is $21, or just about what a private manufacturer would charge for a similar silver medal. Regrettably, the piece is not a commemorative coin. That would have been a fitting tribute to the Mint's 200th anniversary, and we would have had something worthy of the exorbitant price. •

While a number of advisers recommended that a token coinage be issued, Elizabeth refused to consider it seriously. Lead tokens sometimes were produced illegally to alleviate the constant shortage of small coins, and proclamations issued to forbid their use had little effect. The city of Bristol was granted a license to strike its own copper farthings in 1577. Although square in shape, they proved very popular.

Thus encouraged by the Bristol experiment, the Mint actually struck patterns in base metals, probably the first produced in England. But Elizabeth refused to permit the regular striking of these attractive pennies, halfpennies and farthings. Her reasons remain a mystery, but perhaps she was reluctant to risk repeating the monetary disaster that plagued her father's reign. A regular token coinage would not appear until the reign of Charles II (1660-85).

The queen did endorse two monetary experiments during her reign, both of which were failures. Between 1561 and 1572, Elizabeth permitted Eloye Mestrell, a Protestant refugee who had been employed at the Paris Mint, to produce coins of exceptional quality using the latest machinery available. His coins threatened the entrenched elements at the Mint, and eventually pressure from the guild of moneyers put an end to his endeavor. Although Mestrell was disgraced and fired, his coins continued to circulate into the next century, wearing far better than the contemporary handhammered pieces.

The second innovation, the production of a series of coins designed to compete with the famous Spanish "pieces of eight" in the realm of international commerce, also ended in failure. The dollar (8 testerns), half dollar (4 testerns), quarter dollar (2 testerns) and eighth dollar (testern) struck in this series in 1600-01 usually were called "Portcullis Money" because of the use of Elizabeth's favorite device on the reverse of each piece.

It was hoped that these coins would help the newly founded East India Company capture a large share of the trade between Europe and the Orient, but the authors of the scheme were sadly disappointed by foreign merchants' refusal to accept Portcullis Money in place of the more familiar Spanish pieces. This was rather ironic, since the English coins often were produced from silver seized from the treasure fleets of Spain; in fact, the new coins were sometimes overstrikes of Spanish coins of the same size and weight.

The coinage of Elizabeth I is interesting not only for its design, but also for its place in the history of numismatics. Since the Queen's effigy did not age, perhaps the most reliable method of establishing the approximate date of a coin is the examination of its mintmark. Nearly 30 different marks were used during Elizabeth's reign, beginning with the lis of 1558-60 and ending with the numeral 2 in 1602 (in 1601 the Mint began to employ the last digit of the date as a mintmark, a practice that was not continued by James I). Sometimes a mintmark was used for more than a year.

During the same period, the use of dates to denote the year of issue also gained favor. Roman numerals had been used in the reign of Edward VI, but they proved too cumbersome. Later, the use of Arabic numerals was only slowly adopted, and with no real uniformity. Hammered and milled sixpences bearing dates in Arabic numerals were first struck in 1561, and the series continued without interruption until 1602.

Since as many as three different mintmarks might have been used in the same year, uniform dating is absolutely necessary in determining the actual age of a coin. The threepence, 1½ pence and ¾ pence also are dated. All gold coins struck during the reign are undated. Oddly enough, the coins of Elizabeth, unlike some of the coins of Edward VI and Mary, had no mark of value on them, a fact that must have caused anyone unfamiliar with the English system a great deal of confusion. (To aid in distinguishing the coins, the sixpence, threepence, three halfpennies and threefarthings were marked with a rose behind the queen's head to distinguish them from the shilling, groat, half-groat and penny. Some of the half-groat pieces were marked with two pellets behind the bust to further identify that denomination.)

From time to time, hoards of coins buried during the period of the English Civil Wars and Interregnum (1641-60) are discovered, and judging from the contents of these treasure troves, at least half of the circulating medium may still have consisted of Elizabethan coins. While most sur-living pieces are worn or badly clipped, they nonetheless bear testimony to the quality as well as the quantity of Elizabeth's coinage. To judge from what survives, the silver denominations struck in quantity were the sixpence, threepence, twopence and penny, with the sixpence easily dominant.

From the end of the great recoinage until the queen's death in March 1603, the amount of coins produced grew at a tremendous rate. Production at the Mint in London, the only facility actually in service during the reign, was twice the yearly average at all the mints operating during her grandfather's reign. It has been estimated that the actual number of coins in circulation in 1603 represented a 100-percent increase over the number in use in 1509.

Much of the bullion that circulated in 1603 was American in origin and probably "spoils of war"—a genteel form of piracy against the Spanish that had the queen's silent approval. During the reign of Elizabeth I, £5,427,139 worth of new coins was struck—£3,849,753 silver; £794,138 gold; and an additional £783,248 recoined from debased silver coins struck by earlier monarchs.

To eliminate badly worn coins, the principle of minimum legal weights was established by a proclamation of October 12, 1587. Weights for checking coins were manufactured by order of the government, and every town was commanded to purchase a set. Many localities were slow to respond, but it was a necessary administrative reform that sought to prevent many of the problems that had plagued the coinage in 1558.

From the standpoint of design, the coins of Elizabeth I are outstanding. The gold sovereign of 30 shillings, upon which the engraver lavished a remarkable amount of detail, shows the queen enthroned in her robes.

The silver crowns of 1601 and 1602 also are noteworthy for their attention to detail. Considered by many authorities to represent a fairly accurate portrait of the queen in her last years, they nonetheless deny the ravages of time, as do the portraits of Elizabeth in other media. Charles Anthony, who is credited with this beautifully executed piece, was a diplomat as well as a master of his craft.

While the standard image found on most of the denominations issued during the reign was based on the "Coronation" portrait of 1559, some very attractive variations were created from this model. On the obverse of the gold ryal, Elizabeth rides upon a caravel with a light stern and low, pointed prow, instead of the slow, medieval cog found on the coins of her predecessors.

Elizabeth I struck the first English coin to bear the title "Defender of the Faith"; it was the quarter-angel, a gold piece worth 2 shillings 6 pence. Unfortunately, her halfpenny was so small, it had neither portrait nor legend, only a portcullis on the obverse and a cross on the reverse.

As Elizabeth's coinage evolved during her long reign, it achieved a degree of stability, uniformity and abundance that justifies it as the true precursor of modern English currency. But perhaps its real fascination lies in its use as a symbol of the nation's special virtues and the divinely ordained office of monarch as personified by Elizabeth I, probably the greatest female ruler of all time.

■ An important new discovery heads the many additions to the 4th edition of Confederate and Southern States Currency (ANA Library Cat. No. US60.C7 v.1 1992) by ANA Governor Grover Criswell Jr. An 1861 $5 (Criswell T-32), commonly called a "blacksmith note," with a black rather than red-orange overprint is the numismatic highlight.

Supplies of the 1976 edition of Criswell's reference were exhausted nearly 10 years ago. The 4th edition, released at the ANA convention in Orlando, includes many new features, such as a major section on contemporary counterfeit Confederate notes and a listing of notes from the Indian territories. The latest edition also reflects up-to-date prices and completely revised sections for each state.

Criswell's Confederate and Southern States Currency is hardbound, 418 pages, 6 x 9 inches, and filled with black-and-white photographs of each type. Published by BNR Press, it can be purchased for $40 postpaid from Criswell's, Salt Springs, FL 32134-6000.

■ The Cent Book (ANA Library Cat. No. GB30.W7) is the first new standard reference on varieties of U.S. cents of 1816-39 in more than 50 years. Award-winning author John D. Wright has collected this series for almost 40 years and written numerous articles about the topic. His new, 400-page book is well-suited to advanced collectors as well as beginners.

Wright includes almost 500 large-size photographs of coins from several prominent collections, showing examples of every known variety. Another 400 actual-size photographs illustrate die chains. Complete descriptions are given for each die. Striking variations and die descriptions are listed, and an extensive glossary and rarity table provide additional valuable information.

The Cent Book is available in hardcover for $120 plus $5 shipping and handling from Litho Technical Services, Attn: Wright, 1600 W. 92nd St., Bloomington, MN 55431.

The formal debate on the proposal began at a couple of minutes after 6 o'clock that evening. There was penance (" 'In God We Trust' and all other inscriptions will remain on the Congress had played an April Fool's joke on the American people. After wasting hundreds of hours debating the issue of coinage redesign and the merit of commemorative coin proposals, and spending thousands of dollars on hearings and transcripts, they voted to continue the debate, the hearings and the controversy.

The committee determined that the House bill would go back to the Senate and state the position that there would be no coinage redesign, but that the commemorative coins and medals would be fine. Ultimately, Representative Jimmy Hayes voted against the redesign that he had spoken in favor of at two separate public coinage hearings. Wylie deserted the ship (he later announced he would not run for reelection). Technicalities aside, the House then unanimously voted to approve the conference committee's report minus the coinage redesign proposal.

On April 28, the Senate made a final attempt to resolve the coinage redesign issue, asking for a straight-up-and-down vote following a two-hour debate. The discussion was dramatic and focused on the pride of the Senate versus claimed errors on the part of the House.

With the nation in a recession and any number of significant political issues in need of resolution, it was almost reminiscent of the mid 19th century, when the Senate chamber was the source of rich debate and lore concerning free coinage of silver. Commented Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D-New York), "My heavens, this Chamber shook and rattled for two generations on the subject of the free coinage of silver. By golly, did we not orate on that. . . . If ever there was a source of innocent merriment, it is collecting coins. It is teaching, learning, conserving. The millions of coin collectors across the country would appreciate the redesign of our coins."

But, no matter. The issue, as perceived by the Senators, was whether there was going to be a series of new commemorative coins in the coming years, or whether they were going to remain tied to coinage redesign and the strong likelihood of being ignored by the House of Representatives.

The Senate's final decision was not by any means to reject the idea of coinage redesign. The proposal had become a political "hot potato," an idea of substantial merit whose time had not yet come.

"I certainly know, and it is well known by my colleagues, that Senator Cranston has worked tirelessly to persuade House members of the merits of coin redesign," said Senator Donald Riegel (D-Michigan), chair of the Senate Banking Committee and leader of the fight to confirm the House Conference Report as passed April 8.

"It is my view, without in any way prejudicing Senator Cranston's strongly held position, that we do now need at this time to proceed with these other commemorative coins," he explained. The reason: Acting Mint Director Eugene Essner had written to Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell (D-Maine) and Minority Leader Robert Dole (R-Kansas) asking for their support and to advise them that "if enactment is not forthcoming very soon, the mint will be severely limited in its ability to fully produce and market these coins."

The text of Essner's letter was reprinted in full in the Congressional Record and made reference to substantial lead-time required to "select designs, produce dies, conduct trial strikes, procure presentation boxes, etc."

Where Essner implied that the "etc." was of substantial duration, Cranston provided hard facts in his point-by-point rebuttal, noting that the Mint had never had a particularly difficult task in producing circulating or commemorative coins when mandated to do so by Congress. Specifically, he cited the Kennedy half dollar (authorized December 30, 1963, with coins entering circulation on January 30, 1964), the Lincoln Memorial cent (reverse design begun September 1, 1958, with circulation beginning January 3, 1959), the Peace dollar (design competition held November 25, 1921, with coins entering circulation on January 13, 1922) and others.

Senator Christopher Bond (R-Missouri) responded by noting that the House had passed the conference report by a 410-to-0 vote, and recited that "as we all know, the saga of this coin package is amazingly long and drawn out . . . I happen to think that our colleague from California [Cranston] makes a very good point. I think he has a strong argument . . . We have done everything we can. But they have repeatedly refused. They appear adamant not to accept a coin package if it contains coin redesign."

Bond quoted from a letter sent to the Senate Majority Leader by House Majority Leader Representative Richard Gephardt (D-Missouri), Esteban Torres and Majority Whip David E. ference report today, there will be no White House coin . . . I am not here to argue against the merits of the coin redesign. I am simply stating the facts as they appear, as the lineup is between this body and the other body."

Finally, it was time to take the roll of "yeas" and "nays." Cranston persuaded just 21 other colleagues, and a 75-to-22 vote approved the Conference Report without coinage redesign.

And so, at least for now, coinage redesign remains mired in controversy. In this year of political flukes, no one can predict with accuracy which way the winds will blow or whether coinage redesign will get yet another chance. More than likely, it will remain for another Congress—and another champion—to make design change a reality. •

CELEBRATING ITS 102TH anniversary in 1993, the American Numismatic Association (ANA) is the only hobby group operating under a Federal Charter granted by the United States Congress. The ANA is the largest nonprofit, educational organization promoting the collecting of coins, medals, tokens and paper money as a hobby and as a means of recording history.

Colorado Springs, Colorado, is the home of the ANA's national headquarters, located at 818 North Cascade Avenue, adjacent to The Colorado College and several blocks north of the city's scenic downtown area. Specimens of medals, paper money, ancient coinage and other fascinating numismatic items are displayed in the Association's museum.

The ANA Resource Center features the largest circulating library of numismatic books, catalogs and periodicals in existence. The Association's "School of Numismatics" offers numerous seminars to help collectors broaden their horizons and sharpen their numismatic skills. The ANA Authentication Bureau renders professional, impartial opinions as to the authenticity of coins.

ANA headquarters is located in Colorado Springs, Colorado, just minutes from the city's scenic downtown area.

Codes of Ethics

Members' Code of Ethics

Approved August 1965 by the ANA Board of Governors; revised August 25, 1986.

Membership in the American Numismatic Association is a privilege extended to those persons and organizations deemed worthy thereof and is not a matter of right. Such membership can be maintained only until the Board of Governors determines that the conduct of a member has been such that, in the best interest of the Association, his membership should be terminated.

For the guidance of its members, this Code of Ethics has been duly adopted by the Board of Governors under the authority vested in it by the Federal Charter and the bylaws of the Association. Any violation of this Code will be grounds for expulsion from the American Numismatic Association.

As a member of the American Numismatic Association,

I agree to support and be governed by the Federal Charter and the bylaws of the Association, and by such rules, policies and regulations as may be in force from time to time;

I agree to conduct myself so as to bring no reproach or discredit to the Association, or impair the prestige of the membership therein;

I agree to base all of my dealings on the highest plane of justice, fairness and morality, and to refrain from making false statements as to the condition of a coin or as to any other matter;

I agree to neither buy nor sell numismatic items of which the ownership is questionable;

I agree to conform to the accepted standards of dignified advertising;

I agree to take immediate steps to correct any error I may make in any transaction;

I agree not to sell, exhibit, produce nor advertise counterfeits, copies, restrikes and reproductions of any numismatic items if their nature is not clearly indicated by the word "counterfeit," "copy," "restrikes" or "reproductions," incused in the metal or printed on the paper thereof, with the exception of items generally accepted by numismatists and not in any way misrepresented as genuine.

I agree to represent a numismatic item to be genuine only when, to the best of my knowledge and belief, it is authentic;

I agree to fulfill all contracts made by me, either orally or written, to make prompt payments upon delivery and to return immediately any item that is not satisfactory;

I agree to give aid to members in their quest for numismatic knowledge.

Dealers' Code of Ethics

Approved August 1967 by the Board of Governors; revised March 1991.

As an ANA member dealer, I pledge myself to the following principles:

To fully comply with the ANA Members' Code of Ethics as published in The Numismatist.

To purchase and sell coins from fellow collectors and dealers at prices commensurate with a reasonable return to the seller and for a reasonable return on my investment with regards to the then prevailing rate.

To furnish my clientele with advice on numismatic information to the best of my ability.

To not knowingly handle for resale forgeries, counterfeits, unmarked copies, altered coins or other spurious numismatic merchandise that is not clearly labeled as such.

To frequently publish my statement of return privileges which will allow my customers a minimum of fifteen (15) days from my date of mailing or other delivery to return numismatic material for a refund, except bullion or bullion-related material and coins encapsulated and graded by a recognized certification service. If a customer submits a coin to a certification service for authentication or grading and notifies me of such submission within ten (10) days of my date of mailing or other delivery, I will continue to recognize his return privilege for fifteen (15) days after such service mails the coin back to my customer. In an auction sale of consigned material, the return privilege period may be made available only to mail bidders, and the period for the return of such material may be limited to five (5) days from the mail bidder's receipt thereof. Whether or not an item has been returned within the limited return period, a dealer may be subject to expulsion or other disciplinary action for a) the intentional sale of any counterfeit item or any item with an altered date or mintmark, b) the intentional misrepresentation as to the grade of any item, or c) the failure or refusal to provide a refund or replacement for any item referred to in a) or b) preceding, whether or not the sale or misrepresentation was intentional.

To abide by all local, state and federal laws in all numismatic matters and to assist in the prosecution of violators of the law in this respect.

To recognize and respect my own contracts and business dealings and those of fellow members of the Association.

To refrain from making unjustified and/or false statements or misrepresentations in my relations with others and to fully cooperate for the advancement of our hobby and business in my relations with collector and dealer alike.

Any violation of this Code will be grounds for expulsion from the American Numismatic Association.
